Loans, 1918-19.

257. Provision has been made in the Budget for the discharge of £500,000 India Bonds, and for a reduction of the amount of British War Loan (1929-47) taken over by India by £20 million by payment to His Majesty's Government of the proceeds of the war loan to be floated in India in 1918-19.

258. The net receipt of £1,248,300 in 1918-19, will go to raise the cash balances of the Home treasury which are estimated to stand at the end of 1918-19 at £17,029,400 inclusive of £6,000,000 held on behalf of the Gold Standard Reserve.

* Head (10) represents expenditure defrayed by reduction of Provincial balances.

† These include other Departments of His Majesty's Government than the War Office, the Commonwealth of Australia and the East African Protectorate.

‡ The figures shown under head (13) differ from those given in the Home Treasury Ways and Means statement, as Bills drawn by the Secretary of State towards the end of one year are paid in India in the next. The figures of the present statement represent payments in India.

1917-18. Main features of Budget estimates.

263. In the Budget estimate for 1917-18, the cash balance in the Indian treasuries on the 1st April 1917 was taken at R22,72 lakhs. It was estimated that (1) the net Imperial revenue in India would amount to R36,72 lakhs, (2) there would be a net receipt of R2,89 lakhs under Unfunded debt, (3) a sum of R79 lakhs would be available from the Famine Insurance grant for the avoidance of debt, (4) a net receipt of R22 lakhs would accrue in connection with Imperial and Provincial loans, (5) the remittance and capital transactions of railway companies would result in a net credit of ₹2,08 lakhs and (6) the miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions inclusive of capital contributed by Native States for the construction of State Railways would bring in a net receipt of ₹67 lakhs.

On the other hand, provision was made for: (1) a recoverable outlay of ₹54,75 lakhs in connection with the war on behalf of the War Office and a further outlay of ₹4,07 lakhs on behalf of the Ministry of Munitions, the Commonwealth of Australia and the East African Protectorate, (2) a net expenditure of ₹15 lakhs from Provincial balances, (3) capital expenditure in India on railways (inclusive of outlay by companies) and canals to the extent of ₹3,91 lakhs, (4) an outlay of ₹38 lakhs on the construction of the new capital at Delhi, (5) the discharge of ₹12 lakhs of permanent, and ₹50 lakhs of temporary, debt, and (6) a small payment of ₹70 lakhs on account of Council bills.

The total payments mentioned above aggregate ₹64,58 lakhs, against a total receipt of ₹43,37 lakhs; the net disbursement was to be met to the extent of ₹10,50 lakhs from the proceeds estimated to be received in the current year of the Indian war loan floated on the 15th March 1917, and to the extent of ₹6,28 lakhs from silver received from the Secretary of State for coinage. The balance of ₹4,43 lakhs was to be found by a reduction of the Indian cash balance which would stand at the end of 1917-18 at ₹18,29 lakhs.

1917-18. Main features of Revised Estimate.

264. The results, according to the Revised estimate, show considerable variations from this forecast. The year opened with a cash balance which was only ₹22 lakhs more than the Budget forecast; the receipts in the year 1916-17 from the Indian war loan were ₹1½ crores more than anticipated and there was an improvement of over ₹3 crores in the revenue account, Imperial and Provincial, as compared with the Revised estimate (see paragraph 7); but these improvements were largely set off by a deterioration in other transactions, mainly disbursements by the Military Department. The recoverable war expenditure has risen very heavily during the current year, and there has also been an acute demand for private remittances of funds to India by Council bills. The difficulties in effecting remittances to India through the ordinary channels have led to an abnormal issue of money orders on India by foreign countries and we have had to provide large sums in India to meet disbursements on behalf of other countries, mainly America and Ceylon, from circumstances arising out of the war. On the other hand, the receipts from the War Loan including cash certificates have far exceeded anticipations, and a considerable sum has been obtained from the issue of Treasury Bills. The Secretary of State has also sent a larger remittance in the form of silver than the small sum taken into account in the Budget, and there has been a very satisfactory improvement in the revenue account, Imperial as well as Provincial. With these additions to our resources, it will be possible to meet the recoverable war expenditure in full and in addition direct remittances to the Home treasury to the extent of ₹37,33 lakhs and to close the year with a balance of ₹24,78 lakhs. The receipts which we are obtaining from Treasury Bills in the closing months of the year account for this large balance, and the surplus will be fully required for the ways and means operations of the coming year.

265. The net disbursements on account of outlay recoverable from the Home Government (inclusive of sums disbursed on behalf of the East African Protectorate and the Commonwealth of Australia) are now estimated at ₹1,02,91 lakhs against the Budget forecast of ₹58,82 lakhs and Council bill payments from Treasury balances will total ₹37,33 lakhs against ₹70 lakhs only assumed in the Budget. The proceeds from the War Loan inclusive of cash certificates which were taken in the Budget at ₹10,50 lakhs will amount to ₹47,27 lakhs; and a sum of ₹47,00 lakhs will be received from Treasury Bills inclusive of a temporary loan of ₹4,00 lakhs from the Bank of Bombay. Eliminating these transactions, there will be a net receipt in India of ₹17,82 lakhs according to the Revised estimate against the corresponding figure of ₹14,60 lakhs in the Budget. The improvement of ₹3,22 lakhs is the net result of the following variations. For the purposes of this analysis, pro formâ adjustments relating to the cancellation of debt in connection with conversion operations and purchases for the sinking fund for the Indian War Loan 1929-47 have been left out of account as they have no effect on ways and means; also a similar adjustment in connection with the transfer to Government of securities belonging to provident funds of railway companies.

	[In lakhs of Rupees.]
(1) Improvement in the combined revenue account of the Imperial and Provincial Governments . . .	11,32
(2) Addition to cash balances on account of larger purchase of silver by the Secretary of State	13,71
(3) Increase in amount available from the Famine Insurance grant for the avoidance of debt	17
(4) Reduction of Irrigation capital outlay owing mainly to the credit of the cost of certain dredgers taken over by His Majesty's Government	20
(5) Increase in net recoveries of Imperial and Provincial loans	67
(6) Increase in net receipts in connection with miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions	99
Total increase in receipts or decrease in outgoings .	27,06
(7) Credits placed at disposal of Federal Reserve Bank of New York	4,00
(8) Deterioration under Savings Banks Deposits owing mainly to withdrawals for investment in war loan . . .	1,58
(9) Increased debits to the war stores suspense head representing cost of military stores and equipment charged to suspense pending allocation to forces or to Indian requirements	3,92
(10) Reduction in net credits on account of remittance and capital transactions of railway companies owing mainly to a decrease in the capital expenditure which is incurred in England and is passed on to India for adjustment in the Indian accounts	1,36
(11) Larger discharge of debt (representing two instalments of the Gwalior loan of 1887 payment of which was postponed since the outbreak of the war) . .	24
(12) Larger payments of money orders issued by foreign countries on India	7,43
(13) Cost of coinage executed in India for the Egyptian Government	89
(14) Supplies of funds to Ceylon and Jeddah (mainly for the purchase of tea for the War Office in Ceylon and for the purchase of foodstuffs on behalf of the latter in India) .	1,91
(15) Debits in connection with adjustment of value of Treasury bills deposited in England for subscriptions to the Indian War Loan and larger opium revenue realised in England	2,51
Total decrease in receipts or increase in outgoings .	23,84
Net improvement .	3,22

266. The increase of R99 lakhs in the net receipts in connection with the miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions in the above analysis results from a number of variations, the more important of which are mentioned below. There will be an aggregate credit of R3,32 lakhs under the suspense head during the current year owing to the adjustment as recoverable expenditure of outlay on stores and on the South Persia Rifles which was actually incurred in 1916-17 but could not be accounted for in that year. On the other hand, there will be a large deterioration owing to increased cash balances held by Military disbursing officers in consequence of an expansion in the area of operations and by officers of the Railway and Postal Departments owing to the closing days of March being holidays. The net transactions of local and municipal funds will also be considerably worse owing to withdrawals for investment in the war loan.

1917-18, Rupee loans.

267. The total receipts from the Indian War Loan, subscriptions for which were invited from the 15th of March 1917, amounted to R44,29 lakhs inclusive of R4,38 lakhs from the post office section of the loan and R1,66 lakhs tendered in London in the form of British Treasury bills. Of this sum, R6,02 lakhs were realised in 1916-17, the receipts in the current year thus amounting to R38,27 lakhs. The total subscriptions were distributed among the different issues of the loan as follows :—

	(In lakhs of rupees.)
5 per cent. war loan, 1929-47	12,54
5½ „ war bonds, 1920	19,80
	44,29

The gross receipts from cash certificates, the issue of which was also announced in March last, amounted to R10 crores. Certificates of the value of R1 crore are expected to be encashed during the current year, the net receipts thus amounting to R9,00 lakhs.

1918-19-Main features of Budget estimates.

268. In 1918-19 the net Imperial revenue is estimated at R34,60 lakhs; a sum of R83 lakhs will be available from the famine insurance grant for the avoidance of debt; the remittance and capital transactions of Railway companies are likely to result in a net credit of R1,46 lakhs; net receipts of R1,82 lakhs and R10 lakhs are anticipated in connection with Unfunded debt and Imperial and Provincial loans; it is estimated that there will be an addition of R20 lakhs to Provincial balances; and a sum of R4,00 lakhs will be received from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in repayment of the credits placed at its disposal in the current year. On the other hand, provision has been made (1) for a recoverable outlay of R1,02,00 lakhs to be incurred on behalf of the War Office and of R7,76 lakhs on behalf of other authorities, (2) for payment of the annual instalment of R12 lakhs in repayment of the Gwalior loan of 1887; (3) for capital expenditure of R4,64 lakhs on railways and canals and of R38 lakhs on Imperial Delhi; (4) for repayment of the temporary loan of R4,00 lakhs taken from the Bank of Bombay in the current year; (5) for the payment of Council bills which remained unpaid at the end of the current year amounting to R2,90 lakhs; and (6) for net disbursements on account of miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions amounting to R1,53 lakhs, the chief item being payment of money orders issued by foreign countries on India. It is assumed that these will be in excess of the normal issues, though on a smaller scale than in the current year.

The total amount of funds required by the Government of India next year, on the assumption that fresh Treasury Bills will be issued in that year in place of those of the value of R43 crores which will fall due for repayment, therefore aggregates R1,23,33 lakhs, while the receipts at its disposal amount only to R43,01 lakhs.

269. The deficiency of R80,32 lakhs will be found in the following manner :—

	(In lakhs of rupees.)
(1) By credits from silver purchased by the Secretary of State .	19,42
(2) By proceeds from new Indian War Loan (inclusive of cash certificates) to be floated in 1918-19 provisionally estimated at	30,00
(3) By special remittance from the Secretary of State through the Paper Currency Reserve	24,52
(4) By reduction of cash balances	6,38
Total .	80,32

The cash balances in India at the end of 1918-19 will thus stand at R18,41 lakhs.

-18 and -19.

270. The following table gives details of the transactions of Savings Banks and Provident Funds during a series of years, and the estimated transactions for 1917-18 and 1918-19:—

Office Savings Banks, etc.

1918-19 (Budget)	71,93,000	1,01,93,000	1,73,86,000

271. There will be a net withdrawal of R55 lakhs from Postal Savings Banks in the current year against a net deposit of R75 lakhs assumed in the Budget estimate, the deterioration being due to withdrawals for investment in the war loan. The Budget estimate for 1918-19 anticipates neither a net deposit into nor a withdrawal from these Banks, but provides for a growth of R72 lakhs in the deposits in the various Provident Funds for Government servants and in the similar funds of railway companies recently taken over by Government.

Appendix I.

PRO FORMÄ ACCOUNT OF EXPENDITURE ON DELHI AND THE DELHI PROVINCE.

Prefatory Note.

I.—Scope of pro formâ account.

The following pro formâ account, with its supporting statements, exhibits the expenditure, initial and annual, on Delhi and the Delhi Province and also any receipts and savings which form a direct set-off to that expenditure. The account has been prepared in consultation with the Comptroller General and carries his approval as regards both its form and its substantial completeness at the present date subject to the qualifications implied in the following prefatory remarks ; it will be added to, or amplified later, if experience should show this to be necessary.

2. The main item of the account, as regards non-recurring expenditure, is the Delhi project proper, the figures for which appear against item 1 of Part I.—Initial Outlay. The principal recurring charge is that representing the expenditure in the new province, which appears as item 1 of Part II.—Annual Expenditure.

3. The account necessarily exhibits any expenditure occurring under the named heads, without qualification on account of contributory causes. It must, therefore, be clearly understood that the increase of expenditure, including that in the Delhi Province, is not wholly due to the change of Capital. Thus, an increase of the garrison at Delhi on strategic grounds had been already independently and strongly recommended to the Government of India by the Chief of the General Staff and endorsed by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in July 1911, before the transfer of the Capital had been officially proposed, and the reconstruction of the accommodation of the troops already there had long been recognised as pressing. Similarly, the recent advance in the policy relating to education and sanitation, particularly the latter, would, under any circumstances, have involved increased expenditure in this city. For practical purposes, these considerations must be ignored in the figured statements, as well as various similar points of minor pecuniary significance. The same principle will be applied to the Railway expenditure, i.e, the cost of any remodelling of the railway system which is connected with the constitution of the new Capital will be exhibited in full in the pro formâ account. A wholly independent railway requirement, such as the permanent marshalling yard which will eventually replace the temporary yard now in use, will not be shown.

II.—Relation between the pro formâ account and the regular accounts.

4. A brief explanation is added below connecting the various items in the pro formâ account with the entries in the published accounts and estimates. Some further explanations are also to be found in the account itself and in its supporting statements.

5. The capital expenditure directly incurred on the construction of the new Imperial Capital at Delhi is shown in the regular accounts under the special head "51—Initial Expenditure on the new Capital at Delhi." The only other item of expenditure which will be recorded in the capital section of the regular accounts is that arising from diversions or re-arrangements of the railway system, which will appear under the head "48—State Railways."

Item 1 of Part I of pro formâ account. / Item 3 (b), ibid.

6. The initial expenditure incurred during the years 1911-12 and 1912-13 in connection with the provision of temporary accommodation for the Government of India at Delhi, pending the construction of the new Capital, has been treated, on the advice of the Comptroller General, as a revenue charge, under a special minor head styled "Temporary Delhi" subordinate to the major head "45—Civil Works." Any non-recurring receipts which may eventually be obtained in connection with these temporary works, e.g., from the sale of lands and buildings when no longer required by the Government of India, will be similarly credited under a special head subordinate to the major head "XXXI—Civil Works."

Item 2, ibid. / Item II, ibid.

Items 1 and I of Part II of pro formâ account.

7. The remaining expenditure is mainly brought to account in one of two ways: either, first, as expenditure of the new Province; or, secondly, as departmental expenditure chargeable to the Department in which it is incurred.

8. The expenditure and receipts appertaining to the quasi-provincial administration of the Imperial area are brought to account in the same way as in the case of other minor administrations, and are eventually published separately, like the figures for Coorg and Baluchistan, in an appendix to the Civil Estimates. But as the Civil Estimates are not published till late in the year, a special arrangement has been made by which the figures for the Delhi province under each major head are separately shewn in the various sections of the Financial Secretary's memorandum. It will be noted that any grants which may be specially given from Imperial revenues in aid of the Delhi Municipality or other local funds will be brought into the regular accounts and, consequently, into the pro formâ account also, since they will appear as charges of the Delhi administration.

Items 3 (a) and III of Part I of pro formâ account.

9. Expenditure which does not appertain to provincial administration is recorded, as in the case of other provinces, under its appropriate departmental head in the regular accounts. Thus expenditure on the land and buildings required for the new Cantonment, and any corresponding receipts, appear under the Army and Military Works heads respectively, under both of which a special Delhi sub-head has been opened. Railway capital outlay has already been referred to. Railway revenue charges and receipts similarly come under the Railway account head. In these cases, the pro formâ account necessarily exhibits only initial expenditure and non-recurring receipts, as Military expenditure is not being permanently increased and the influence of the new Capital on the ordinary daily receipts and working expenses of the Railways cannot evidently be satisfactorily isolated. This latter consideration also applies to the case of Postal and Telegraph expenditure, which moreover represents ordinary administrative expenditure of the department, and is relatively insignificant in amount. For these reasons, in the case of this department, neither the initial outlay nor the recurring receipts and expenditure have been included.

Items 4 to 7 and I and IV of Part I, and Items 2 and 3 and II to V of Part II of pro formâ account.

Item I of Part I.

10. There are also a few items of expenditure and of actual receipt or of definite saving which are not recorded in the accounts of the Delhi Province or in the departmental accounts, but which it is necessary to take into consideration in calculating the expenditure in Delhi and the Delhi Province. Most of these are self-explanatory, but attention may be called to the intended treatment of the sale-proceeds of vacated lands and buildings at Calcutta (if any) and elsewhere. These will be credited under the major heads "XXV—Miscellaneous" and "XXXI—Civil Works", and the pro formâ account will take credit only for actual Imperial receipts. No account will be taken, in the statements themselves, of book transactions, or of the considerable savings obtained from the vacation of rented accommodation, i.e., of relief in respect of rental payments which the Local Government obtains by giving up private buildings previously leased for provincial establishments, and moving the latter into offices formerly occupied by the Government of India. Any reference made to such saving will, therefore, be found in an explanatory footnote. [See Part I, Note 5.]

11. Outlay on stores and all other expenditure incurred in England under a capital head or as a revenue charge, which can be distinguished as appertaining to the construction of Delhi or to the administration of the Delhi Province, have been included in the pro formâ account.

§ NOTE 4.—The expenditure shown against item 7 represents mainly the proportionate cost of the Delhi Audit Office and the cost of temporary establishments employed in the Secretariats in connection with the change of Capital.

‖NOTE 5.—These heads will record only actual receipts obtained from the sale of the vacated buildings and land. As explained in paragraph 10 of the prefatory note, this procedure has the effect of excluding a substantial true saving in respect of rented accommodation. Thus in 1913-14 to 1916-17 the Government of Bengal, by moving their offices into the vacated Imperial buildings in Calcutta, saved R2,75,000, partly by being enabled to dispense with private accommodation previously leased, and partly by being relieved from the necessity of renting further accommodation.

† NOTE 2.—This assignment represents the amount by which the Provincial outlay on the Delhi area exceeded the Provincial revenue obtained therefrom prior to the constitution of the Imperial enclave, i.e., the net expenditure incurred on the area of which the Local Government has now been relieved.

‡ NOTE 3.—The figures shown against item III will be subject to increase as additional offices are successively transferred from Calcutta to Delhi.

§ NOTE 4.—The figure shown against item IV is a minimum figure calculated once for all on the assumption that all offices or portions of offices which previously moved between Calcutta and Simla have subsequently moved regularly between Delhi and Simla. The actual saving throughout has been larger owing to certain establishments which previously moved to Calcutta being retained in Simla throughout the cold weather.

His coolness in command and his own personal example of courage when repelling determined counter-attacks were beyond all praise. When the enemy's second counter-attack penetrated to within 10 yards of his position he organised bombers and himself threw bombs until the attack was broken.

No. 2468 Colour-Havildar Bhagwan Singh, Infantry, for conspicuous gallantry, endurance and devotion to duty in action on the 11th January 1917. It was chiefly due to his splendid personal example and his constant encouragement to his men that they kept cool and steady and succeeded in launching the pontoon in spite of heavy casualties. He was on the point of starting across when he received orders to come back.

Jemadar Hayat Muhammad, Punjabis, for conspicuous gallantry and initiative in action on the 24th February 1917. His platoon came under heavy flanking fire from some buildings and all except 12 became casualties. Seeing that the fire was hampering the whole of the

He twice brought up supplies of bombs across the open under heavy fire, showing great contempt of danger. He also endeavoured to rescue a British officer who was incapacitated.

No. 2573 Rifleman Kharak Bahadur Sunwar, Gurkha Rifles, for conspicuous gallantry and coolness in action on the 31st March 1917. Alone he charged seven of the enemy who were attacking the picquets. He killed one and wounded two before the remainder fled. He was wounded but held on to his ground till assistance came and accompanied a patrol sent out before daylight to attack.

Subadar Labh Singh, Infantry, for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in action on the 22nd February 1917. When the attacking troops on the front of his position were wavering he left his trench under heavy fire and fearlessly exposing himself successfull, rallied them, led them back to the captured enemy trench and consolidated the position. He has always displayed the finest military qualities.

Subadar Lachman Singh, Infantry, for conspicuous gallantry, ability and leadership when commanding a platoon in action on the 9th January 1917. He succeeded in stopping and rallying men of another regiment who were momentarily withdrawing under heavy fire. He has proved himself an exceptional officer in two actions.

Jemadar Lalu Khattri, Gurkha Rifles, for conspicuous gallantry and resource in action at the forcing of a passage of a river on the 23rd February 1917. On landing and finding that his British officers had become casualties, he collected and rallied his men in his sector and with great courage and dash cleared a nullah 300 yards wide which was strongly held, thereby safeguarding our right flank.

No. 2423 Havildar Lalu Rajanna, Sappers and Miners, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 1st and 2nd January 1917. During night operations he was one of a party of 1 British officer and 14 men engaged under heavy fire in wiring an advanced picquet within 250 yards of the enemy's front line, Of this party three men were killed and three wounded, but they successfuly completed the wiring after 5 hours' work in the open and in bright moonlight. Their success was largely due to the fine example set by this Havildar.

No. 4170 Havildar Loganadan, Sappers and Miners, for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in action on the 26th January and 23rd February 1917. Whilst with a party ordered to block a trench he took command on the death of the Havildar and by his personal courage and example got the block completed under heavy fire. Again at the forcing of the passage of a river he rendered most gallant aid to the wounded. All through the operations he has behaved splendidly.

No. 615 Lance-Naik Mall Singh, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry and ability in action on the 1st February 1917. He displayed marked courage throughout the day.

Subadar Mangal Singh, Sikh Pioneers, for conspicuous gallantry when in command of a platoon which was digging trenches in the open under close and well directed fire from the enemy on the 9th and 10th January 1917. No. 1198 Second Class Sub-Assistant Surgeon Mul Singh, Indian Subordinate Medical Department, for conspicuous gallantry and initiative in action on the 17th February 1917. He remained in the front line trenches under heavy fire, and at night more than once went over the parapet into "No Man's Land" to superintend the bringing in of the wounded when he would have been perfectly justified in staying in the "Aid Post." His cheerful spirit in all weathers, his moral and gallant example, and his untiring energy have been a pattern of soldierly conduct on every occasion.

Jemadar Nand Singh, Punjabis, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 9th March 1917. When his platoon was under heavy fire and was suffering severe casualties he showed marked coolness in controlling his men, and by his fine example and personal courage succeeded in taking them absolutely unshaken to our most advanced fire position within close range of the enemy. This gallant officer was afterwards killed in action.

Subadar Narain Singh, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 1st February 1917. He led his platoon with courage and although his British officer was killed he stemmed several counter-attacks. He was eventually cut off but succeeded in regaining our lines in the evening although severely wounded. He brought in 5 other severely wounded men with him.

No. 2587 Lance-Dafadar Pahlad Singh, Lancers, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 6th and 7th March 1917. Jemadar Sewa Sing, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry and coolness in action on the 1st February 1917. In the attack on the enemy's position, finding that nearly all the British officers were casualties, he rallied the men in the enemy's front line exposing himself most fearlessly. After the withdrawal he brought in wounded men both by daylight and after dark. He has been brought to notice for conspicuous gallantry on a previous occasion.

Subadar Sher Singh, Punjabis, for conspicuous gallantry and initiative in action on the 22nd February 1917. When all the British officers of his company had become casualties he continued to consolidate and command his company under an intense fire in a manner deserving of the highest praise.

Subadar-Major Sundar Singh, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry and dash in action on the 29th and 30th January 1917. He cleared the front line of one of our objectives with a platoon and a Lewis gun. He has always displayed the greatest coolness and courage in action and has set a splendid example to all ranks of the regiment.

Subadar Tika Khan, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry and leadership on the 22nd February 1917, in taking his platoon (which was the leading one) into the enemy's second line with a rush during the attack on the enemy's positions, and later in assisting his Company Commander to steady the men and make them hold on when the companies on the right had fallen back.

Jemadar Muhammad Umar Faruk Khan, Lancers, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 19th December 1916. He showed great courage and coolness in extricating his rear-guard under heavy fire. No. 3626 Sowar Sultan Mahomed, Cavalry, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 27th March 1917. Though dangerously wounded by a shell which killed his horse and nearly blew his right arm off besides causing other injuries about his body, he volunteered to ride, thus liberating the four men who were carrying him on a stretcher to join the firing line. He suffered intense pain but by sticking to his horse for two miles under heavy fire, he enabled the squadron, which had been considerably delayed, to withdraw slowly to positions from which it could check the enemy's advance. He displayed exceptional courage and endurance. He was previously brought to notice for gallantry. He afterwards died of his wounds.

Jemadar Alam Khan, Sappers and Miners, for conspicuous gallantry, determination and coolness in action during the bridging operations when forcing the passage of a river on the 23rd February 1917. Throughout the day he was in charge of work at the head of the bridge, and set a fine example both early in the day under heavy fire and later on when shells were falling on each side of the bridge. LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The following Act of the Indian Legislative Council received the assent of the Governor-General on the 22nd March 1918, and is hereby promulgated for general information :—

ACT No. X of 1918.

An Act to give additional powers to Courts to deal in certain cases with usurious loans of money or in kind.

WHEREAS it is expedient to give additional powers to Courts to deal in certain cases with usurious loans of money or in kind; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Usurious Loans Act, 1918.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan.

(3) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official gazette, direct that it shall not apply to any area, class of persons, or class of transactions which it may specify in its notification.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1) "Interest" means rate of interest and includes the return to be made over and above what was actually lent, whether the same is charged or sought to be recovered specifically by way of interest or otherwise.

(2) "Loan" means a loan whether of money or in kind, and includes any transaction which is, in the opinion of the Court, in substance a loan.

(3) "Suit to which this Act applies" means any suit,—

(a) for the recovery of a loan made after the commencement of this Act ; or

(b) for the enforcement of any security taken or any agreement, whether by way of settlement of account or otherwise, made, after the commencement of this Act in respect of any loan made either before or after the commencement of this Act.

Re-opening of transactions.

XXVIII of 1855.

3. (1) Notwithstanding anything in the Usury Laws Repeal Act, 1855, where, in any suit to which this Act applies, whether heard ex parte or otherwise, the Court has reason to believe,—

(a) that the interest is excessive ; and

(b) that the transaction was, as between the parties thereto, substantially unfair,

the Court may exercise all or any of the following powers, namely, may,—

(i) re-open the transaction, take an account between the parties, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest,

(ii) notwithstanding any agreement, purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation, re-open any account already taken between them and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest, and if anything has been paid or allowed in account in respect of such liability, order the creditor to repay any sum which it considers to be repayable in respect thereof ;

(iii) set aside either wholly or in part or revise or alter any security given or agreement made in respect of any loan, and if the creditor has parted with the security, order him to indemnify the debtor in such manner and to such extent as it may deem just :

Provided that in the exercise of these powers the Court shall not—

(i) re-open any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation which has been entered into by the parties or any persons from whom they claim at a date more than six years from the date of the transaction ;

(ii) do anything which affects any decree of a Court.

"Explanation—In the case of a suit brought on a series of transactions the expression

'the transaction' means, for the purposes of proviso (i), the first of such transactions."

(2) (a) In this section "excessive" means in excess of that which the Court deems to be reasonable having regard to the risk incurred as it appeared, or must be taken to have appeared, to the creditor at the date of the loan.

(b) In considering whether interest is excessive under this section, the Court shall take into account any amounts charged or paid, whether in money or in kind, for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonuses, premia, renewals or any other charges, and if compound interest is charged, the periods at which it is calculated, and the total advantage which may reasonably be taken to have been expected from the transaction.

(c) In considering the question of risk, the Court shall take into account the presence or absence of security and the value thereof, the financial condition of the debtor and the result of any previous transactions of the debtor, by way of loan, so far as the same were known, or must be taken to have been known, to the creditor.

(d) In considering whether a transaction was substantially unfair, the Court shall take into account all circumstances materially affecting the relations of the parties at the time of the loan or tending to show that the transaction was unfair, including the necessities or supposed necessities of the debtor at the time of the loan so far as the same were known, or must be taken to have been known, to the creditor.

Explanation.—Interest may of itself be sufficient evidence that a transaction was substantially unfair.

(3) This section shall apply to any suit whatever its form may be, if such suit is substantially one for the recovery of a loan or for the enforcement of any agreement or security in respect of a loan.

(4) Nothing in this section shall affect the rights of any transferee for value who satisfies the Court that the transfer to him was bonâ fide, and that he had at the time of such transfer no notice of any fact which would have entitled the debtor as against the lender to relief under this section.

For the purposes of this sub-section, the word 'notice' shall have the same meaning as is ascribed to it in section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. IV of 1882.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be construed as derogating from the existing powers or jurisdiction of any Court.

Insolvency proceedings.

4. On any application relating to the admission or amount of a proof of a loan in any insolvency proceedings, the Court may exercise the like powers as may be exercised under section 3 by a Court in a suit to which this Act applies.

Secretary to the Government of India.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Saturday, the 9th March, 1918.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding and 58 Members, of whom 52 were Additional Members.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

SECOND STAGE.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I beg to open the second stage of the discussion on the Financial Statement."

RESOLUTION RE INCREASED EXPENDITURE FOR TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

11-5 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I beg to move the Resolution which stands in my name:

'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council an increase in the recurring appropriation from Imperial revenue of 30 lakhs towards primary education by another 30 lakhs for expenditure from the year 1918-19 onwards on the development of education in—

(a) Mechanical, electrical and sanitary engineering.

(b) Metallurgy.

(c) Mining.

(d) Forestry.

"Sir, the subject of this Resolution has been discussed to a large extent when the Public Services Commission Report resolutions were being considered on previous occasions, and yesterday also there was a general expression of opinion that the Government ought to grant larger sums towards the development of education in India. Particular stress has not been laid upon aid to the branches which I seek to see developed, and I therefore propose to make a very few brief remarks in connection with that aspect of the question. I do not think any very lengthy remarks are needed to commend the need of development or money therefor to the Council. The needs of the higher services, as well as the general economic condition of the country, require improvement in education in the branches which I have included in the Resolution. The Public Services Commissioners in their report have these observations on this point. On Agriculture they say :—

'Practical agricultural experience, however, is not demanded of candidates for appointment to the highest posts on the research and teaching sides of the department. In these branches, the chief requisite is a good science qualification supplemented by a term of post-graduate training in agricultural research. We accordingly recommend that facilities for such training be developed in India, and that the standard be brought up to the level of the best equipped agricultural institutions of Europe and America. The training classes should be established at Pusa, such additions being made to the staff of the institution as may be necessary for the purpose.'

"With regard to Forests this is what they say :—

'Direct recruitment should be made to the Imperial branch in India; with this object, a course of training up to the highest European standard should be instituted at Dehra Dun.'

"In regard to Geological survey the following statement is made :—

'A School of Geology should be developed in India which will rank with similar institutions in Great Britain. It is desirable that at one centre at least in India advanced study of this subject should be possible.'

"In regard to Mining the following recommendation is made :—

'Facilities for instruction in mining should be developed in India, and every effort should be made to utilise the services of Indian inspectors. One reason for urging this is, that there is a considerable Indian element among mining managers.'

"Then with regard to civil, mechanical, and electrical engineering and kindred branches they say generally :—

'With regard to the needs of the Public Works Department we are satisfied that the training now given in each of the four colleges is adequate to the needs of the higher branches of the public service.'

"But the evidence suggests improvements in mechanical and electrical and sanitary engineering.

"With regard to the locomotive and other departments they say that :—

'Arrangements should also be provided by which statutory natives of India with suitable educational qualifications would be able to serve as apprentice pupils in the shops and running sheds of the State railways, and so to reach the standard of professional training prescribed for direct recruitment.'

"With regard to Metallurgy, the report of the Committee on Technical Education, which sat more than 14 or 15 years ago, recommended a school for metal working, but nothing seems to have come of that recommendation. There is no doubt, therefore, that from the point of view of equipping educational institutions and workshops for the recruitment of the higher branches of the Indian Services, there is ample justification for the expenditure of the money I ask for. But, Sir, it may be said that the recommendations of the Public Services Commission are under consideration and that, therefore, it is a little premature to consider this subject. And with regard to the Industrial branch, it may be said perhaps that the Industrial Commission is sitting and will submit its report about April, and that, consequently, we might wait till that report is received. My answer to these two objections would be that, with regard to the Public Services Commission's Report, the matter has been already under investigation for about two years, and all that I say, is that some beginning should be made in the current year towards the solution of this problem. With regard to the Industrial Commission's Report, what I would say is, that the report will be received in June, and we are already late in making the necessary improvements to enable us to compete with foreign countries in the matter of industries. The recent commercial returns show how India has been swamped with foreign goods. So, apart from the question of recruitment for the Public Services, I would strongly urge upon the Government the need for the development of education in the branches which I have mentioned.

" Sanitary Engineering is one of the subjects which has to be taken up in India, and I hope that special attention will be paid to it.

" The recommendations of the Universities' Commission, with regard to the London University, show that they have there an Imperial College of Science and Technology in Metallurgy, Mining, and in Civil and Mechanical Engineering, and that it was hoped to secure professors with the highest qualifications at a salary of £1,000, and that £500 was sufficient for Readers. Therefore, the expenditure need not be very prohibitive in the matter of equipping Indian colleges, and besides, we already have in this country institutions in Agriculture, in Forestry, in Mining and in Mechanical, Civil and Electrical Engineering at Roorkee, Sibpur, Poona and Madras. All that is needed, is to further equip them with superior professorial staff and the necessary scientific appliances.

" So far as to the need and the cost. Then the question is, whether I am right in asking for a grant from the Imperial Revenues, especially in view of the possibility of the decentralisation of Provincial finance. My answer is, Sir. that these needs that I am asking to be served are chiefly for the higher Indian services, the Imperial services so to speak, and also for the general economic development of the country in which the whole of India is interested, towards equipping railways, larger irrigation works, and so on; and, consequently, there is justification for the appropriation of Imperial Revenues, towards the objects in respect of which support is sought. Of course, if any of these should fall within the exclusive category of Provincial finance, certainly, adjustments may be made, but I do not think that this step should be deferred, or can be deferred, until the other problem is fully solved.

" Then the question may be asked whether the grant can be utilised during the current year. If a brand new institution or brand new institutions had to be started, there would be some difficulty; but we have our own institutions which can be developed, and it ought not to be very difficult to import old men—men who are too old for fighting—into India for the purpose of filling the professorial appointments. So there may be no difficulty in getting the required professors; the equipment is there to a certain extent, and it ought not to be difficult, therefore, to utilise the grant during the year.

" Then the more important question would be whether there is any possibility of inducing the Government in the state of the Imperial finances this year to make any grant with regard to that subject. Sir, much has been said yesterday already. There has been a growth of nearly £26 millions in the general revenue since the year 1913-14 But have the general needs of the country been served by even a very, very small percentage of the excess ? That is the first point I would like to put to the Council. The second is that there are certain increases and certain allotments suggested which might await happier times; under the discharge of debt, Indian bonds and Railway bonds, an expenditure of £3·5 millions is proposed, a loan of 2·7 millions is to be discharged, which might be included in the new loan. Then there is a debt of ·8 millions to the Gwalior State, but if His Highness the Maharaja of Scindia is not very particular on insisting upon repayment, it might be postponed. I am only suggesting possibilities. I will not not say any of them or all of them are particularly feasible.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir William Meyer.] [9TH MARCH, 1918.]

"Then there is railway development for which another million is provided. I do not say that that should be curtailed; but it is just possible that all the money may not be expended during the current year. Then the elasticity is so great and has been proved to be so great that it ought not to be difficult to find £200,000 for the expenditure that I seek in connection with this department.

"Then between the acceptance of this by the Government and their making any provision, there would be a long time, and I hope, therefore, that the figures can be so adjusted or will be capable of being so adjusted on later information as to make it possible for the Government to accept this Resolution."

11-15 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I regard the Resolution with very considerable sympathy, but I shall presently explain why I am not able to accept it in this form. The Resolution says :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council an increase in the recurring appropriation from Imperial revenue of 30 lakhs towards primary education by another 30 lakhs for expenditure from the year 1918-19 onwards on the development of education in :—

(a) Mechanical, electrical and sanitary engineering,

(b) Metallurgy,

(c) Mining,

(d) Forestry,

"To put it briefly, on technical education, including Forestry and Agriculture. I must again refer to what I said yesterday in regard to our financial position. It is quite true that we budget for a surplus of about £2⅓ million. It may be—I hope it will be—that that surplus will prove to be actually exceeded in the year that lies before us. But, as I tried to emphasize in my speech on the 1st of March, we want all this money for the demands on our Ways and Means resources arising out of the war. I gave a sketch of these demands in my speech, and I had to say that, on the balance sheet I was able to strike, we had not been able to make specific provision for the Secretary of State's Council drawings which are so important for India's external trade; that we must meet these in some way or other, and that, therefore, even if we get windfalls, it is necessary to preserve them.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has made some rather ingenious remarks as to putting off paying our just dues, and hoping to save money on the provision for railway renewals, a very much needed provision for the helping of our much tried railways, which have done such splendid service. I am afraid I cannot accept those expedients as being practical and of financial validity.

"I must also repeat the arguments I used yesterday against further commitments in the shape of Provincial grants, when our future financial relations with the Provinces are under consideration, and it is proposed to give them larger resources to meet what is primarily Provincial expenditure.

"I gave some figures yesterday to show how the total expenditure on education had advanced as compared with 1913-14—the last year of peace. I showed that the coming budget provided 1 million pounds more expenditure for education than in that year; and as regards technical education I now cite some figures for the year 1916-17—the last for which details are available—as compared with the period five years previously, 1911-12. I find that comparing 1911-12 with 1916-17, the expenditure on engineering colleges and schools, engineering and surveying schools, technical and industrial schools, increased in all from about 24 lakhs to 29 lakhs. The former figure includes a Provincial outlay of 14 lakhs, the latter of 18 lakhs.

"Well, as I said yesterday, it is most undesirable to plunge into ill-considered schemes of outlay merely in order to impress the public, and this is specially the case in regard to technical education. We have got to be careful that what is spent is spent to the best advantage to meet actual, immediate or prospective demands. On this point I should like to quote some very apposite remarks made as regards engineers in paragraph 86 of the recent report of the Public Works Reorganization Committee. They say:—

'We are not convinced, however, that the annual output of engineers is less than the existing demand, and this view receives support from the fact that 46 per cent. of the upper subordinate posts in Bengal are filled by Bachelors of Engineering, that 60 per cent. of the products of the engineering class at Madras accept subordinate positions, and that posts as upper subordinates are guaranteed to and accepted by the students from Poona passing second and third in the Bachelor of Engineering examination. It is obviously uneconomical for Government to provide, at considerable expense, an engineering education of the highest standard for a man who will remain for the greater portion of his life in an inferior position and will never have the opportunity of exercising the knowledge gained during his college course.'

"Similar remarks were made in respect of electrical and mechanical engineers in the report of Colonel Atkinson and Mr. Dawson on Technical Institutions. I sincerely hope—and I yield to none in that hope—that our industrial development will hereafter justify provision for a much larger output of technically trained men; but we must not let the supply exceed the demand. If so, you will have a set of men for whom the State has provided training and who cannot be properly utilised. I may say, too, that we shall have guidance presently in this as in other matters from the report of the Industries Commission. My Hon'ble friend has referred among other things to Mining. I may remind the Council that Sir Thomas Holland, the President of the Industries Commission, is one of the greatest living authorities on mining—certainly the greatest living authority on mining in India; and that it is not likely the development of mining and the training of men in mining enterprise will have escaped his notice or his recommendations.

"Then, again, it would be most difficult to obtain the necessary teaching personnel, the reason being the paucity of men in the scientific cadre owing to the war, and the difficulty of recruiting fresh men. My Hon'ble friend says 'get an old batch of old men from Home.' Well, I do not think that would be feasible. In the first place, the old men, or a considerable portion of them, would succumb to the unaccustomed Indian climate; and, in the second place, there is nothing in which the practical outlook changes so much as in these technical subjects. We do not want old men who are passed their work. If you want to have good instruction, you must have it from men who are in the prime of life and who are thoroughly au fait with existing and future developments.

"Then, as regards agricultural education, a reference was recently made in my Hon'ble colleague Sir Claude Hill's Department to Local Governments as to the promotion of this. We have not received the replies yet. Here, again, it is undesirable to commit ourselves prematurely to schemes which might possibly be unreliable.

"For these reasons, Sir, I cannot accept the Resolution, but I am prepared to make an offer to my Hon'ble friend which, I hope, will meet his purpose, and which, I may say, is made with the full concurrence of my Hon'ble colleagues who administer the Departments in question. On the figures in the Financial Statement, for reasons already explained, I can make no further grant; but it may be, though I cannot yet speak with any knowledge on the subject, that the final budget figures will show a somewhat better position for 1918-19 than we have yet been able to assume in the Financial Statement. If that should prove to be the case, subject to the sanction of the Secretary of State which will be necessary, I shall be prepared to set aside such sum, not exceeding 30 lakhs, as may seem desirable, after consultation with my Hon'ble colleagues in the administrative departments concerned, for purposes of technical and agricultural education. This money would, at the outset, be regarded as an Imperial reserve. We cannot commit ourselves in any way at present as to its eventual application. It may be, as I have said,—I hope it will be,—that we shall get material guidance on this point ere long from the report of the Industries

Commission. It may be, too, that the replies to the references made to Provinces on the subject of agricultural education will help us to an early practical course in that matter. But for the present I can only give this strictly provisional undertaking. I regret I cannot commit myself to hand over such money as may be available to the Provinces. It may be that we shall be able to spend it to better advantage under the direct agency of the Government of India—especially as my Hon'ble friend observed that some of the objects concerned were rather all-India objects than Provincial objects.

"Now that is all I have to say. As I have explained, I cannot accept the Resolution as put before the Council, but I do make this conditional promise that, if our budget for 1918-19 shows a betterment as compared with the Financial Statement, I will give the fullest consideration to the putting aside of a sum, not exceeding 30 lakhs, for the general objects which my Hon'ble friend has referred to, and I hope that, in view of this explanation, he will not press the Resolution."

11-27 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I have only one or two observations to make with reference to the remarks which fell from the Hon'ble the Finance Minister. A passage was quoted from the report of the Public Works Department Reorganisation Committee that even at present the output of engineers is not small and, perhaps, exceeds the requirements and the fear was expressed that the supply might exceed the demand. May I say, Sir, that in the following paragraph the Commissioners state that, if their recommendations are accepted and the Indian agency be increased, the management being handed over to the local boards, there would be a demand for a larger number of highly qualified engineers and better arrangements will have to be made to enable the engineering colleges to increase the output. But the point really is not as to whether the output of engineers educated on the present lines is sufficiently large; the point is as to whether the highest type of teaching open to candidates in the rest of the world is open to students seeking education in these various branches in India; and it is for that higher teaching on which stress was laid by the Public Service Commissioners, it is for the development of that higher education that I have sought this money, and therefore, I think, Sir, that the money can very well be utilised at an early date.

"Then with regard to the second point that was put to me, that we must not unduly hasten the pace of making large advances to Provinces unless we had properly considered schemes, may I say that this subject of technical education has engaged the attention of Government for more than 20 years past, that the Public Services Commission's recommendations have been before them for the last two and a half years, and that there is a limit to the patience even of the Indian community. I hope, therefore, that there will be more driving power in the various administrations towards advancing the cause which we all of us have at heart. But in view of the very sympathetic remarks of the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer that the Government would consider the question and make provision this year if the finances would permit, I do not see that any useful purpose will be served by pressing the Resolution. It only remains for me to thank the Government for the assurances they have given. I beg to withdraw the Resolution if the Council would permit me to do so."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE GRANT OF 50 LAKHS OF RUPEES IN AID OF SANITATION.

11-31 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I beg to move the second Resolution which stands against my name, namely :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a grant 50 lakhs of rupees may be made in aid of sanitation, especially towards the supply of pure drinking water in rural areas.'

"Here, again, almost every Member of the Council, official as well as non official, is convinced of the need for better sanitary equipment in order to improve the health of the Indian population. Recent events such as the increase of plague and increase in mortality from fevers, especially malaria, have rivetted, almost compelled, the attention of every thinking Indian to the subject and made him pause and consider as to whether he has been doing his duty in not putting sanitation above all other things and all other requirements. The figures available to me with regard to the last census are truly appalling. In several Provinces there has been a diminution in population, and as compared with the Native States, British India cannot boast of having done its duty in the matter, the growth of population having been smaller.

"In Bihar, there was an actual decrease of population of ·9 between 1891—1901 and in the decade 1901—11 the growth was only 1·7 per cent. In the Bombay Presdiency, it was—1·7 and +6 in the two decades. Bombay city itself was depopulated in the years 1891—01 4·1 per cent and the growth has been very small during the latter period. The Central Provinces again fared badly, but in the Punjab the tale is harrowing; there has been a decrease during the period 1901—11 of the population to the extent of —1·7 per cent. whereas there has been a general increase all over India of 5·5. In the United Provinces, also, the tale is equally sickening. Between 1891 and 1901 the growth was only 1·7, whereas between 1901 and 1911 there was an actual decrease of 1·1. A contemplation of these figures is sufficient to convince us that the mortality from the various preventible causes in India is greater than the mortality which ten such horrible wars like the great war now devastating Europe may be accountable for. The growth of population in British India has not been larger during the last decade than that in the Native States, and that is a state of things which requires looking into. So far as to the general need. With regard to the special requirement to which I have drawn attention, namely, the supply of pure drinking water in rural areas, I must say that I made pointed allusion to that special object with reference to the experience I have of my own Presidency. I have travelled far and wide in rural areas for various purposes, and nothing has impressed me so much as the absolute and imperative need of providing pure drinking water which can be done at a comparatively small expense, if only the resources of the Government and of local bodies can be organised on a proper footing. There are very many villages, where a lot of time and energy is spent by half the population (I say 'half' because the women-folk form half the population) in going long distances to get water which is but impure and absolutely inadequate in the hot season; and even where canals run by the side of villages the water is so impure as to cause mortality from fevers and bowel complaints, simply because local bodies have not been able to make proper arrangements for purifying the water. I, therefore, think that this is a subject which requires immediate attention; and there is the Public Works staff which is not engaged fully owing to the curtailment of Public Works expenditure. This is a matter which does not require any special technical skill, because there are hundreds of small overseers and contractors who will be willing to undertake the task, and labour will be forthcoming in abundance. I, therefore, think that the money can be utilised this year if only the grant is made, and I have worded my Resolution somewhat vaguely in order to meet possible objections. I said, 'recommends to the Council that the grant of 50 lakhs may be made in aid of sanitation.' This grant may be made either from the General Imperial Funds or by releasing Provincial funds to the extent of 50 lakhs, if the Hon'ble the Finance Member should say that there is to the credit of Provincial Governments a sum of £545 thousand which may perhaps be utilised for the purpose. I, however, submit that the Imperial grants, having regard to the immense growth in the revenue, ought to undertake a portion of the burden and contribute 50 lakhs of rupees immediately. That is what is due to this particular department of Governmental activity. But if the Government are unable, for the reasons which have been suggested yesterday, to make a grant from Imperial revenue, I hope they will be able to make a grant in the indirect fashion that I have alluded to, by allowing the Local Governments to spend to that extent from, or rather to draw upon, their Provincial reserves. The Financial Statement with reference to that point says that 'instructions have been issued in view of the war conditions to the Local Governments asking them to restrict drawings on their balances which include the unspent remainder of these special grants', and it further says 'any outlay thus postponed is merely deferred until normal times return'. I hope, Sir, that the grant may be made in one of the alternative forms I have proposed, and I think the subject requires the serious consideration of the Hon'ble the Finance Member and the Government of India."

11-39 A.M. The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya :—"I hope, Sir, the Hon'ble the Finance Member will see his way to accept the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend in one of the alternative forms suggested by him. I do not think the cause of sanitation requires any advocacy. Countless plague deaths eloquently call for more money being put forward in the direction of sanitation, and the need for pure drinking water is one of the most insistent needs which calls for attention. There is no doubt that a great deal of money can be most usefully spent in promoting public health and hygiene, and thereby preventing preventible mortality, and, as my friend Mr. Sarma has now suggested an alternative form, I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will see his way to accept the Resolution in one of the forms."

11-40 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—"Sir, I desire to support my Hon'ble friend on my left in this matter. I think the practical thing to do in this case would be for the Government of India to issue instructions to the Local Governments to free their balances for this purpose. They hold large balances for sanitary purposes, and these balances might be usefully employed for the purpose mentioned in this Resolution. Something more has to be done than that. You may give the money to various local bodies, but you cannot compel them to spend that money. I know, as a matter of fact, considerable grants were made to the District Boards out of the cesses which were placed at their disposal, but the District Boards were not able to spend them and so the grants lapsed. Therefore, Sir, it seems to me that apart from the essential need of money something more is required, and that something is the revision of the constitution of these District Boards. The Government of Bengal has taken a distinct and definite step in that direction by appointing by direct election in the case of five or six District Boards, Indian Chairmen for the purpose of carrying on their administration. The experiment has been tried for some months in the district from which my friend Maharaja Manindra Chandra Nandi comes—the district of Moorshedabad. The Chairman-elect is Rai Bahadur Baikuntha Nath Sen, aged 74, but he posesses the energy of a young man and he goes about from place to place in his motor car, visiting distant places, and he has infused a new life into the whole District Board administration. If we had in the District Boards of Bengal chairmen of that type elected by the people, I am sure this problem would be largely solved. Money is needed, and I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will be able to give it to us or, at any rate, to free the balances. But even more essential, I repeat, is the revision of the constitution of these local bodies. Liberalise the constitution, make it more popular, make it more responsible, make the Chairmen feel that they are responsible to the electorate, then and then only I think these balances will be utilised in a proper and more satisfactory manner than they are at present.

"As for drinking water, its value for the purposes of sanitation cannot be exaggerated. Wherever a supply of pure drinking water,—and I speak as a Chairman of one of the municipalties in Bengal,—wherever the supply of pure drinking water has been obtained, it has been attended with substantial benefit to the health of the people. I live in a village near the cantonment of Barrackpore. We have got a filter supply. We pay for it and we get it, and the result is a marvellous change for the better in the health of the people. The Government at present,—I am talking of those riparian municipalities,—is engaged upon a scheme for supplying pure water to the riparian municipalities on the left bank of Hooghly. The estimated cost of the scheme is about R36 lakhs. It is expected that Government will make a substantial contribution, and the municipalities are most willing to tax themselves for the purpose. Therefore, let us have the contribution by all means from the Government, and I hope and trust my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister will be in a position to give us an assurance to that effect. But the constitution of these local bodies must be liberalised, they must be popularised, they must be made responsible to the people, their official character must be banished. Then and then alone the cause of sanitation will be placed upon a satisfactory footing in Bengal and elsewhere."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"Sir, here again I have much sympathy with the objects of the Hon'ble Mover, and I may say that one of the most interesting and, to my mind, pleasant experiences of my Indian career, which now extends over more than a generation, is the change in the attitude of the people towards sanitation. When I was a young official I found, as a District Officer, that sanitary measures were absolutely unpopular. I believe now that as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Bannerjea has said, there has been a change in the outlook, and that people are becoming more and more willing to tax themselves for the purposes of sanitary improvement. But I think my friends will also agree that, although this is extremely desirable, it would be undesirable to force the pace too much and to let people think that they are being coerced into sanitation. I only throw that out by the way, because I repeat that I have the greatest pleasure in looking at the fact of the changed attitude of the ordinary mass of the people towards sanitation. 11-45 A. M.

"Well, here again we have not been absolutely at a standstill as might be thought from some speeches yesterday. I think my friend the Mover will recognise, as being a master of figures himself, that we have advanced during the last few years very considerably. I have got the figures here for sanitation expenditure—and mind you this is only the Government sanitation expenditure; it does not include the expenditure of district boards and municipalities which are primarily concerned with this subject. In 1913-14, the expenditure was £432,000; we are budgetting this year for £715,000, that is an increase of 70 per cent. Then during those happy years in which peace prevailed and the Government of India were able to make grants to the provinces, a good deal was done in the direction of encouraging sanitation. I have some figures here furnished by the Education Department. In the last ten years the Government of India have given recurring grants which now total 85 lakhs a year for sanitation, and 439 lakhs in non-recurring grants; the actual expenditure, altogether, in this way, recurring and non-recurring, for a period of ten years amounts to nearly 10 crores. That is quite apart from the 82 lakhs recurring expenditure given since 1913-14 to certain Local Governments to permit of an increase to the general resources of rural boards with the object that the boards should have a freer hand for sanitation expenditure. These sums are not merely for urban sanitation; much has been made available for rural sanitation also: and in making the grant for 1913-14, the Education Department drew special attention to the needs of rural water supply.

"Coming now to the Resolution, I cannot accept the proposal that we should make a further grant from Imperial revenues of 50 lakhs for sanitation, I can only repeat what I have said before, that although we have a surplus, that surplus is needed, essentially needed, for our Ways and Means purposes in connection with the war, and we cannot dissipate it further. My Hon'ble friend the Mover, however, threw out an alternative suggestion. He said 'let the provinces over-draw from their balances'.

"Well, we have had to ask the provinces to conserve their balances for war purposes. If my Hon'ble friend turns to paragraphs 70 and 71 of my speech introducing the Financial Statement he will find that we have had to cut down the total balances of India, which include provincial balances, very much. We estimate that on the 31st March 1919 we shall not have much more than £11 million, our total balances for all India, whereas we regard the ordinary margin of safety as £12½ million.

"I may say that the Bengal Government came up to us this year and asked to be allowed to draw on their balances a bit, that is that their expenditure in the coming year should exceed their revenue for that year for certain purposes, and one of them was sanitation. The Bengal Government have embarked on a liberal sanitation programme, and we were satisfied with their reason and said that we would allow them to draw on their balance for this purpose. Other Local Governments have not made any similar request, and I must presume therefore that they are satisfied with the increased provision that they have been able to make out of current revenues. It is no use adding to your expenditure and simply provoking lapses, or rash and ill-considered outlay to avoid lapses.

"There is the question of establishment too. The Hon'ble Mover said that the Public Works establishment, not having so much to do as usual, could turn their attention to sanitary works. My Hon'ble friend Sir Claude Hill has just informed me that 33 per cent. of the Public Works establishment are absent on war work, serving in the field or otherwise, so that we have not got the establishments.

"But I will say this, that if in the course of the year any province should come up to us and ask for a further grant for sanitation to be made from the provincial balances, and can show that they can do this without disturbing our Ways and Means calculation by reason of the provincial revenues coming in better than at present anticipated—I say that if any province makes such a request, we shall receive it very sympathetically. I should be very loth indeed to stand in the way of any such request. Therefore, though I cannot accept the Resolution as it stands, I think my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma will not be able to accuse me of want of sympathy."

11-55 A. M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I recognise that the Government are aware of the serious nature of the problem, but to my mind it seems that they have not placed it in a proper perspective. They were deluded into thinking that the improvements that have been effected in recent years resulting in a large increase of expenditure, have been of such a character as to satisfy the average thinker on these questions. But what is the position? There was an increase of expenditure from 60 lakhs to 130 lakhs; has any very great benefit resulted? has enough been done? We find that in 1913 the deaths were 6,845,000, in 1914 there were 7,155,000 or an increase of 300,000, and in 1915 the figures were nearly the same, 7,142,000. Therefore the deaths in 1914 and 1915 are more than in 1913. . . . ."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"There is a larger population probably."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"And the growth of population is only half per cent. During the recent decade it has been 5·5, and the death-rate is much larger, 4 per cent."

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Are these deaths due to want of sanitation only?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"They may be due to want of sufficient food also, which may result in feebler frames unable to resist the ravages of disease. I grant that. I, therefore, submit, Sir, that a larger advance should be made in the desired direction.

"Then with regard to the establishments needed, it is quite true that a number of Public Works officials have gone out, but I believe the curtailment of the expenditure proposed has even been greater; and apart from that, the local board staff undertakes general expenditure of the kind that I have referred to. But in view of the promise the Hon'ble the Finance Minister has made, that if any Local Government, should approach the Government of India for the sanction of larger expenditure, the request would be sympathetically considered, I think that we shall have to transfer our activities from here to the Local Governments, and then press the question if the present Finance Minister or his successor is obdurate. Under those conditions, therefore, and having regard to the reply that has been given, I do not see that there is very much use in pressing the Resolution further; having regard to war conditions, I feel that perhaps it would be improper to press the Government further in this matter. But before leaving the subject, may I ask inasmuch as for every improvement we have asked, this plea of want of funds has been brought forward, whether the Government of India cannot induce the Government of England to help us a little more in this direction by releasing our funds, because one point that I have never been able to understand is why, when 800 million pounds or more have been lent to the Allies and the Colonies, the Government cannot help us to find the funds for the purchases made here. That is a question on which perhaps the Finance Member on some occasion may help to make clear the position of the Government because there is a misunderstanding on the subject."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

THIRD STAGE.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I beg, Sir, to introduce the third stage."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill opened the third stage of the discussion on, and introduced the following heads of, the Financial Statement for 1918-19:— 11-58 A.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Land Revenue.	Land Revenue.
Provincial Rates.	Provincial Rates.
Forest.	Forest.
Agriculture.	Agriculture.
Scientific and Miscellaneous Departments.	Scientific and Miscellaneous Departments.
Irrigation.	Famine Relief.
Civil Works.	Protective Works, Irrigation.
	Irrigation.
	Civil Works.
	Capital outlay on Irrigation.

"Sir, the discussion which has already taken place on the Financial Statement has been more expansive than has been the practice in past years, owing to the change in procedure, and I think I can therefore be rather more brief this year in dealing with the subjects that fall under my care than has been my practice in the past. There are, however, one or two important matters which, I think, the Council would wish me to enlarge upon.

"Dealing in a different order with the subjects from what has been my practice in the past, I would first of all propose to refer to, and inform the Council of, the advance that has been made in the matter of agricultural education since I addressed this Council last year. In accordance with the suggestion which was made to me last year by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya we held an agricultural educational conference during the last Simla Season in June, at which the whole subject of agricultural education was gone into and certain Resolutions passed which have since been referred to the Local Governments, and, so far as we know, they have met with very general approval. For present purposes I propose to refer to what is of the greatest immediate importance among these Resolutions, namely, that which was passed in June last recommending that agricultural middle schools be established in all the Provinces That Resolution, among others, was also referred for the consideration of the Board of Agriculture which met last December in Poona, and which I attended, and was there debated at considerable length, with the result that the Board of Agriculture, while premising that in no circumstances was it desirable to do anything which would retard the progress of scientific investigation and demonstration which they regarded as of cardinal importance, endorsed the recommendation that agricultural middle schools should be established in every Province, wherever possible. They went further and drew up a provisional syllabus for such agricultural middle schools, which should form a very useful basis, I think, for adoption, with such modifications as may be necessary for different Provinces, in the schools which we now hope will come into being. The rapidity with which this scheme for inaugurating middle schools progresses must, of course partly depend on financial considerations, as well as on the enthusiasm of individual Local Governments. But I venture to hope, after what my Hon'ble friend Sir William Meyer has said to-day, that if circumstances prove favourable, and if it is possible for him to allot a certain additional grant, in pursuance of his reply to the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, towards technical education, I shall be able to hope for some of the crumbs from the rich man's table; and possibly be in a position to stimulate Local Governments, always supposing that stimulus is necessary to the establishment—the very early establishment—of certain of these schools to which I, personally, and the Department attach the very greatest importance.

"The proceedings of the Board of Agriculture dealt with very many matters of great importance, and I trust that Hon'ble Members who are interested in agricultural development—and it is a great pleasure to me to notice that their number appears to be growing rapidly —will have obtained and perused copies of the report of the proceedings. I only propose here to refer to one other item there discussed, and that is the subject of uneconomic holdings, which was perhaps the most important matter which came under consideration. The discussion was based primarily on a draft Bill of a rather skeleton character which the Hon'ble Mr. Keatinge, the Director of Agriculture in Bombay, was anxious, I believe, to introduce into the Bombay Legislative Council. The nature of that Bill was of a purely permissive character, the idea being to make it possible for a landlord who so wished, with the consent of all the descendants who might be interested in the disposition of his property, to get it declared that such property should not be further sub-divided, but should pass to his senior next-of-kin. Well, it is obvious that such a measure is one of very considerable difficulty and complexity, and that, since it impinges upon the Hindu law of inheritance, it is a very ticklish thing for Government to discuss. At the same time, its permissive character was, according to my thinking at the time, its best commendation to us for consideration. Generally speaking, the Board of Agriculture were in favour of some such measure being passed, but it was interesting to me to take note of the fact that the people, who at that Board's discussion thought that the measure was likely to prove inoperative and ought to be strengthened very much more, were two prominent Hindu gentlemen present at the Conference, who urged that this was a much too mild measure, and that Government ought to go very much further and peremptorily, if necessary, interfere with Hindu traditions. That was their view, but it was not the view taken by the Board of Agriculture. Of course, the question of whether legislation will be undertaken is still for discussion, but I mention the matter as being to me a very interesting phenomenon, that those who pressed for action in this behalf were the two prominent Hindu gentlemen who were present at the Conference.

"Then the next matter to which I should like to refer is the very important step we have taken in the appointment of a Committee to examine the question of developing the cultivation of long staple cotton. In recent years the world's demand for raw cotton, especially of the better varieties, has very largely outstripped the supply, and to us, in India, that is a matter of very great interest and importance; because it is, perhaps, not generally realised that 20 million acres of the cultivated area of India are at present under cotton, and that, therefore, the potentialities of India in regard to the development and cultivation of long staple cotton are enormous. The question how far that change which is involved in the substitution of long for short staple cotton is possible of achievement depends on very many factors—among others the question of how far we can arrange for marketing arrangements so as to ensure that the cultivator will always be able to obtain the proper premium value for the improved varieties of cotton; and that matter in India does present very considerable difficulty. It may interest the Council, however, to know that, in regard to that aspect of the case, we have arranged for telegraphic intimation to be at short intervals despatched upcountry from Bombay of ruling world prices for the different classes of cotton. That seems to be one step which may help the cultivator to obtain an adequate price for improved varieties. On this Long Staple Cotton Committee, which is still conducting its inquiries under the presidency of Mr. Mackenna, we have a representative of the British Cotton-growing Association and an ex-Chairman of the Bombay Millowners' Association, and I have the best of reasons for believing that they are tackling the subject from a broadminded standpoint, and that they have the interests not only of the manufacturers and the marketing agencies, but also of the cultivator very seriously at heart. It will further interest the Council, I think, to know that the Home Government have decided to appoint a permanent Cotton Committee, the main object of which will be to assist in developing the cotton resources of the whole Empire by keeping in touch with work in progress relating to the growing, handling, and marketing of cotton all over the world and by being a sort of clearing house of information in London. We have been asked to appoint on that Committee out here representatives of the Indian users of cotton and Indian merchants, and I hope, therefore, that the inauguration of this Committee will be a further factor in enabling us to progress in the direction of the development of long staple cotton growing in India.

"I had hoped to be able to tell the Council something about the results arrived at by Professor Maxwell Lefroy when he was out here investigating the silk industry, but, owing to Mr. Lefroy's absence from India, there has been some unavoidable delay in getting out his report, and I am unable to say anything on the subject to-day.

"The Indigo Cess Bill has already passed through this Council, and therefore I need not refer further to the subject of Indigo. But there is an important matter which I should like to mention, and that is the subject of cinchona cultivation. Hon'ble Members are probably aware that there is likely, within a very short period of time, to be a world shortage in the supply of that indispensable drug, quinine, and we have therefore during the past year taken steps to ascertain whether it is not possible for us in India so to increase the area under cultivation of cinchona as to make India, at all events, independent of this shortage in years to come, and possibly also to make India the supply agency for the rest of the Empire. For this purpose, Colonel Gage, Director of the Botanical Survey, was deputed and spent some months last year in investigating possible areas in Southern India, in Assam and in Burma, and it is a matter for congratulation to know that Colonel Gage has or thinks he has (and he is a very great expert on the subject) discovered a very suitable area in one of the districts in Burma for a very large extension of cinchona cultivation. We hope, therefore, that we may shortly be in a position very largely to extend the outturn of quinine.

"The next matter to which I should like to refer for a moment is the recruitment for the Agricultural Service. In connection with the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's Resolution the other day, I had occasion to offer certain remarks, and I do not wish to repeat what I then said; but I should like to observe that we have found it extraordinarily difficult to obtain recruits with the requisite qualifications for the scientific posts under the Agricultural Department. During the past year or so we have taken steps, as I explained, to effect promotions from the Provincial Service and to appoint Indians when we can find them duly qualified. But there has been a shortage, and great difficulty is found in filling some of the posts on the scientific side of the Agricultural Service. All I wish to do now—I am afraid at the cost of repetition—is to say that, while the Government of India are cordially at one with the aspiration of certain Members of this Council that the Indianisation of the Agricultural Service should proceed as rapidly as possible, they also adhere—and, I think, the Council will on the whole agree, wisely adhere—to the great principle that the best men for some years to come must be obtained irrespective of race or creed or anything else in order that no excuse might be given for levelling the complaint hereafter at the Government of India that they had sacrificed what was so vital to the interests of India in deference to a theory.

"I now turn to the activities of the Forest Department; and there again perhaps my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma will be surprised to know that as many as 65 officers of the Imperial branch were away on war duty. Like the Public Works Department, the Agricultural Department has been very seriously crippled in its activities owing to the war and to the zeal with which some forest officers applied for permission to go on work connected with the war. But we do fully realise the importance, more especially in this time of war, of developing, as far as possible, the unlimited forest resources of India. As I had occasion to tell my friend the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha last year, we have decided to create a cadre of forest engineers as one of the most important developments in the direction of forest exploitation, and I may mention that very great activity has, as a matter of fact, been displayed in many Provinces in exploiting forest produce for purposes of the war. The only other point in respect of staff that I need mention is that Madras, the Punjab and Bengal have put forward—and we have approved of—re-organisation schemes involving a total increase of 18 Imperial and 30 Provincial Service Officers, which will meet a long-felt want in those Provinces, as soon as recruits can be obtained. Then, in pursuance of the policy of developing Provincial autonomy in forest matters, we have had under consideration proposals for decentralising the training of forest rangers. At present that work is done in Dehra Dun, and we propose that it shall be done in future in three centres—at Dehra Dun for some of the Upper India provinces, at Coimbatore for some of the Southern and Central provinces, while a new school is to be opened at Dharwar in the Bombay Presidency.

"Turning now to the Public Works Department, it will have been seen from the Financial Statement that our productive irrigation systems, after meeting all charges for maintenance, repairs and interest on capital, have returned a net profit of 331 lakhs as against 315 lakhs, which I anticipated in this place last year. For the ensuing year we estimate a profit of 341 lakhs, the gradual increase being, as I forecasted last year, due to the completion of the Punjab Triple Canal project. The provision for major irrigation works is 70 lakhs, or 20 lakhs less than the provision allowed last year; while the grant for protective works chargeable to famine insurance has been reduced from 60 lakhs to 58. This steady reduction is due to our policy of undertaking no new works, unless it can be shown that they are either urgently required, or will be immediately remunerative, with the result that as each of the works now under construction is completed, the provision is slightly reduced. This, however, does not mean that we have no new project under consideration. The case is far otherwise. Though we are not able to undertake any new works at present, a comprehensive programme of new projects is being drawn up and will be introduced when financial conditions permit. As regards the future developments of some of the major irrigation works, I mentioned last year the Cauvery Reservoir in Madras. Owing to a Privy Council decision there has been some question as to how the water rights of zamindari lands work out, and how far the decision of the Privy Council in reference to those rights affects the probable results of the irrigation facilities provided by this project. The project has not yet been submitted to the Secretary of State pending the investigation of that question. Another great irrigation project in Madras is that for a reservoir in the Kistna; but we have not gone into that fully, because the Cauvery work is both more important and likely to be more beneficial to the country, and we propose to concentrate on that at first. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has referred to the project for a canal from the Sarda River which has quite recently been submitted worked out in detail by the United Provinces Government. This is the project to which I made reference in replying to the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, and it may be of interest if I mention that this scheme when completed will prabably be one of the largest irrigation works in India or in the world. The total length of the channels included in the project exceeds 5,000 miles, and some 9 millions acres will be commanded and 2 million acres irrigated annually. I need only refer very briefly to two other projects which are under preparation, namely, that for the Sukkur Barrage on the Indus in Sind and for the Bhakra dam on the Sutlej in the Punjab. The main object of the former is to convert the existing inundation canals in Sind into perennial canals, while that of the latter is to store the surplus water of the Sutlej during the rains with a view to its utilisation during the dry season. The provision of such storage reservoirs to prevent water running waste and to secure its utilisation during the dry season has become more and more one of the main objects upon which the Irrigation Department is concentrating. I had, the other day, in a visit to my old district of Ahmednagar, occasion to see the changes that have been effected by works of this character. When I was in Ahmednagar 25 years ago, the whole of the Pravara and Godavari valleys were practically deserts in which there were perhaps half a dozen wells which could be seen dotted about on a bare countryside, and where land could be purchased for Rs. 12 an acre. I revisited it the other day to find that I was able to motor for 60 or 70 miles along these valleys through a sea of sugar-cane, wheat and so forth, and ascertained that the land which used to be purchasable for Rs. 12 an acre was very difficult to obtain now for Rs. 400 an acre. That, in the space of 25 years, I think Hon'ble Members will agree with me, is a gratifying change.

"I now desire to mention certain matters with reference particularly to a remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul. I understood the Hon'ble Member to say the other day that there was a serious deterioration in the condition of the people of the country, at all events in parts of the Central Provinces. Well, I confess at once that I do not know whether what Hon'ble Members have noticed in this regard is directly contrary to my own impression when travelling about India and contrasting the condition of the people as it appeared 25 years ago with what it is now. My experience is that one sees on every hand better houses, more wells, better comforts, better implements used by agriculturists in the rural tracts, and on the whole, if I may say so, a greater degree of prosperity. That, however, is an arguable proposition, and I do not wish to lay undue stress upon it. But I do wish to lay stress on, and draw the attention of this Council to certain extracts from, Mr. Mackenna's Report on the progress of agriculture in India which deal with facts which are incontrovertible and which have a great bearing on the correctness of an estimate which concludes that the condition of the people is deteriorating. I would first of all, if I may ask the indulgence of the Council, read an extract from page 15 :—

'The agricultural departments have been successful in demonstrating the improved agriculture of one tract to the backward cultivators of another, e g., the methods of transplanting rice, drilling and intercultivating cotton and other crops, green-manuring, the Poona method of making gur, etc., and it is in these directions that Deputy Directors are doing the most useful work.'

[Sir Claude Hill.] [9TH MARCH, 1918.]

Mr. Mackenna then goes on to give an extract from a report regarding certain operations in the Central Provinces at the Chandkhuri Farm; the Chandkhuri Farm having been established in an area hitherto entirely waste which the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul will recognise by the name of bhata lands :—

'These bhata lands lie higher than the more productive arable lands and are for the most part regarded as uncultivable; a very small proportion of them are poorly cultivated at long intervals to produce wretched crops of the lesser millets.........The original idea was to try growing green fodder crops under irrigation in order to substitute stall-feeding of cattle for the starvation-ration hitherto obtained by grazing......This has been successfully achieved; but Mr. Clouston has not been satisfied with that success. He has gone on to try the cultivation of bhata lands, aided by manure and irrigation, with ground-nut, cotton and cane, and has made a startling success with all three crops.......The cost of cultivation is very little, and the nuts were found to be much larger than those grown in stiff black soil, hitherto regarded as most suitable for this crop.'

Similar good results were achieved in the case of cotton and so on. Water is available, and it only remains to encourage cultivation, and there are hundreds of thousands of acres which will be available to come under cultivation out of these barren lands.

"I will now give another quotation :—

'The cultivation of a short staple variety, roseum, in Berar has brought an additional crore of rupees to the cultivators. The introduction of Company No. 3, a selection from Karunganni cotton, which is an indigenous long-stapled variety, and Cambodia cotton, have produced markedly beneficial results. Similarly, in the Punjab, the cultivation of Mr. Milne's selection, 4 F. American cotton, is extending by leaps and bounds and this year it is expected to bring an additional 45 lakhs to the cultivators.'

In the canal colonies of the Punjab the department is pushing a selected wheat regarding which Mr. Mackenna says :—

'It is estimated that the growers of this wheat got an additional income of at least 2 lakhs of rupees as the result of the higher yield and the premium paid over the ordinary price of wheat.'

In regard to the Central Provinces again, I may draw Mr. Shukul's attention to the increased profits, from growing those wheats, which have been definitely established, at 'from Rs 5 to Rs. 10 an acre,' and as there are 200,000 acres this brings an additional 10 or 20 lakhs a year to the cultivator. In Bengal, the selection of an improved type of rice 'Indrasail' isolated by Mr. Hector has also resulted in very great profits to the cultivators and in the year under report seed sufficient to sow over 20,000 acres was distributed through panchayets, while this year it is hoped to distribute enough for nearly 12 lakhs of acres. In regard to cotton in Madras in the 'Tinnevellies' tract, it is stated on page 25:

'The selected strains Company No. 2 and No. 3 have been found to combine both good yield per acre and staple, and the Director of Agriculture calculates that the ryot who grew Company No. 3 cotton made a profit of some Rs. 28 per acre over those who grew ordinary Tinnies.'

"I hope I have not wearied the Council with the recital from this book of the progress of agriculture in India, but I felt that it was necessary to say something, however little, to show that, so far as the Agricultural Department are concerned, the claim to progress in the direction of benefiting the cultivator is not lacking in evidence.

"There is only one other reference I should like to make to what has fallen in the course of the debate from Hon'ble Members; and that is to the remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda in reference to New Delhi, that its construction should be temporarily stopped. I may best refer him to the answer given by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer to Mr. Basu last year. My Hon'ble Colleague said :

'As I explained the other day, we are just spending enough to keep things going to keep the scheme alive. That scheme is one which was brought into effect by the fiat of the King-Emperor, and it is the deliberate policy of the Government of India and of His Majesty's Government at Home. My friend was not in the Council two or three years ago; but if he had been, he would have had a striking exhibition of the way in which Hon'ble Members from other parts of India endorsed the project of the New City.'

[9TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir Claude Hill; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir C. Sankaran Nair.]

"As was the case last year, so is it this year, that the provision for New Delhi is merely sufficient to prevent waste. I have already in answer to a question by another Hon'ble Member explained how largely the staff has been reduced and the rate of construction is merely such as to keep the scheme alive."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I ask for information whether with regard to the 18 Imperial Forest officers, the recruitment is to be thrown open to all without regard to their race and only with a view to efficiency?" 12-28 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"I am afraid I did not quite understand the point of the Hon'ble Member's question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"If I am not wrong, I remember having heard that sanction has been given for 18 additional Imperial officers in the Forest Department. I ask as to whether these officers will be recruited from Europeans as well as Indians irrespective of their caste, having regard only to their efficiency."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"The Hon'ble Member is quite correct. The recruitment will be made, under the orders and regulations at present obtaining at Home, through the Secretary of State in the ordinary way. Recruitment is not closed to anybody." 12-29 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair introduced the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19:— 12-30 P.M.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Sanitation.	Sanitation.
Education.	Education.

"Sir, I beg to introduce the Education and Sanitation heads of the Financial Statement. Hon'ble Members will find at page 62 of the Financial Statement that the expenditure on Education continues to grow, and will next year considerably exceed all previous records. When I took over my present office in 1915, we were spending about 4½ crores of rupees a year. Last year we spent 5 crores, and next year we hope to spend over 6 crores. The number of scholars which seven years ago was barely 6½ million was over 7 millions in 1916-17, and I trust that it will be found to exceed 8 millions in the present year, and that we shall make a further advance next year. This is not as great a progress as we might wish to see, but none the less it is a very distinct advance and one which we cannot ignore. The additional expenditure expected in 1918-19 is due partly to the new Imperial grant announced by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer but also and to a still larger degree to a policy of educational expansion which has been adopted by all the Local Governments without exception. Our own grant is, as the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer stated, one of 30 lakhs, and it follows on a grant of 30 lakhs given last year for the training and pay of teachers. The grant for 1918-19 is like its predecessor intended to meet the needs of primary education. It will be available not merely for schools themselves, whether these schools are for boys or girls, but also for Inspectors and for the training and pay of teachers as far as primary schools are concerned. It is generally recognised that of the various pressing needs of education in this country, that of primary education is the most pressing, and we should have been glad to have been able to present to this Council some scheme which will provide in advance for the progressive extension of primary education in India, but as His Excellency has explained in his speech at the opening of this Session, the changes in our financial system which will be inaugurated as part of the contemplated reforms render it impossible for us at this stage

to formulate any programme of this kind in advance. In the meantime we have, as the Council are aware, given an opening to the introduction in several provinces of schemes by which local bodies can enforce in their areas a system of compulsory education, and the provincial budget shows for the first time a provision for meeting the expense of introduction of compulsory education. Hon'ble Members will find it at page 64 of the Statement. We have not ourselves adopted compulsion as part of our present programme, but we are anxious to see primary education increase by whatever means this increase may be obtained, and, on these grounds, we have included in our budget the new recurring grants of Rs. 30 lakhs for primary education. Of this sum, we are keeping one lakh in hand, and of the rest Madras would get 5½ lakhs; Bombay 4; Bengal 5½; United Provinces 4½; Punjab 2; Burma 1½; Bihar and Orissa 3; Central Provinces 1½, and Assam 1 lakh. A further half a lakh will be distributed as follows:—

	Rs.
North-West Frontier Province	32,000
Ajmer	8,000
Baluchistan	5,000 and
Residency Areas	3,000

These grants are intended for the extension of primary schools on the present voluntary footing, but they will, of course, be available also for granting assistance in areas where compulsory education is being introduced.

"Turning to Sanitation or, as I should prefer to call it, Public Health, we contemplate here also a considerable increase in our expenditure. We spent Rs. 78 lakhs in 1916-17; we shall be spending 87 lakhs this year, and we hope to spend 107 lakhs next year. Most of the provinces have budgetted for an increase of expenditure and the increase contemplated in Bombay and Bengal is considerable. We have also provided for an increase of expenditure from the two items from which we ourselves make grants, namely, the sanitary grant and the grant for the Indian Research Fund Association. The reserve at our disposal from the sanitary grant was Rs. 6 lakhs. Of this sum, we have given one lakh towards the drainage of Peshawar, one lakh for the improvement of the Badrinath Kidernath pilgrim route, Rs. 75,000 for the relief of congestion in Ahmedabad and Poona, Rs. 80,000 for improvement at Amritsar and for anti-plague measures at Rawalpindi, Rs. 60,000 for the relief of the congested town areas in the Central Provinces, and Rs. 90,000 for various sanitary improvements in Delhi. Next year we hope to have some 8 lakhs at our disposal, and some portion at any rate of that sum will be utilised in assisting Local Governments to provide for the improvement of the health conditions attending pilgrimages. For our other main source of expenditure—the Indian Research Fund Association—we should ordinarily have had 7½ lakhs available, but our Bacteriological Department is depleted owing to the war, and we temporarily surrendered 3½ lakhs out of this sum. Of the remaining 4 lakhs, we have put aside 1 lakh for the Hygiene Institute which will be an important branch of the School of Tropical Medicine at Calcutta, designed to give medical post-graduates an up-to-date training in public health such as is not at present available in India. We have also devoted Rs. 26,000 to improvements to the Central Research Institute at Kasauli and Rs. 16,000 to experiments in the improvement of vital statistics in Madras. The rest of our money has been allotted mainly to special lines of investigation, such as plague, diabetes, flies and hookworm disease. Hon'ble Members will perhaps remember the account which Sir Pardey Lukis gave us in this Council last year of the widespread debility occasioned by this last-named disease among the coolie class, and I am glad to say that during the present year a sum considerably exceeding half a lakh has been spent on the important inquiries into this hookworm disease which have been carried out by Lieutenant-Colonel Clayton Lane in Bengal and by Dr. Mhasker in Madras. We propose during the present year to continue our liberal support of the chief investigations which have been carried on during the present year, and if opportunity offers to extend further the scope of these forms of research. Our inquiries are, as I have stated, much circumscribed by the absence of many of the officers of the Bacteriological Department at the front, and at the present moment out of a research staff of 31 officers 18 are on Military duty. There are at this time 17 officers engaged in laboratories or on special inquiries, of whom 9 are Indians: and in addition to these, Indian assistants have been associated in the investigations now under the conduct of European officers. We are in this way forming the nucleus of a body of indigenous experts who will, I hope, constitute a source of great future strength to the well-being of this country.

"I have made an allusion to the late Sir Pardey Lukis, and I wish before sitting down to remind the Council of the debt which we owe to him in the development of bacteriological research in India. Hon'ble Members are aware of his great services in other lines, but I think I am right in saying that he looked on this particular branch of his activities as representing in a special way his own contribution to the welfare of India. He was very closely associated with the inception of the Research Fund Association, and it was due to his constant efforts that the Fund was utilised, as it has been, for the investigation of the more prominent questions affecting public health in this country. In continuing the work on the lines which he inaugurated, we shall maintain it in the way he would best have wished to the memory of his services to India."

12-39 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Sharp:—"Sir, it is usual at this stage to lay on the table a short narrative dealing with the educational activities which took place during the last completed financial year. I think I explained last March that during this year the Quinquennial Review of Education would be published and that, therefore, no short narrative would be laid on the table. Instead, I beg to lay on the table the document generally known as 'Salient Features', which gives the more important figures of education in India and also in the individual provinces."

The Council then adjourned till Tuesday, the 12th March, at 11 o'clock.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61).

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Tuesday, the 12th March, 1918.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding, and 57 Members, of whom 52 were Additional Members.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

Appointment of an Indian as Chief Justice.

1. "Has any Indian ever been appointed a permanent Chief Justice in any of the High Courts or Chief Courts in India? If not, will Government be pleased to state if there is any statutory bar to such an appointment?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"Such records as the Government of India possess do not show that an Indian has been appointed substantively as Chief Justice in any of the High Courts or Chief Courts of India. There is of course no statutory bar to such an appointment; and, as the Hon'ble Member is no doubt aware, Indians have, from time to time, been selected to officiate as Chief Justice or Chief Judge."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

Exemption from Income-tax of Premiums taken by Landlords in Bengal.

2. "(a) Are the Government of India aware that the Government of Bengal have exempted from income-tax all premiums taken by landlords for settlements of waste or abandoned lands with tenants?

(b) Is it a fact that fees levied for recognition of a transfer of agricultural land from one tenant to another are liable to income-tax?

(c) Is the same principle followed in the matter of income-tax administration by the other Provincial Governments?

(d) If not, in what particulars does it differ in the different Provinces, and why?"

[Sir William Meyer; Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri Khan Bahadur.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer replied:—

"(a) The Government of Bengal have ruled that a premium taken by a landlord for granting settlement of waste or abandoned lands with a tenant is similar to salami taken on the creation of a patni or other tenure, and is therefore not liable to assessment under the provisions of Act II of 1886, being either the price paid to the proprietor for a portion of his rights, or an advance payment of rent.

(b) Fees levied for the recognition of a transfer of land from one tenant to another are not agricultural income for the purposes of the Income-tax Act, 1886, and are therefore liable to income-tax.

(c) and (d) The Government of India have no information as to the practice followed in Provinces other than Bengal."

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Retirement of Government Servants.

3. "(a) With reference to the recent amendment of Article 459 of the Civil Service Regulations, regarding retirement of Government servants who have reached the age of 55 years, will Government be pleased to state the reasons which have led them to distinguish, for the first time, between ministerial officers and officers other than ministerial?

(b) In making the amendment, did Government take into consideration—

(i) the nature of the work which ministerial officers have to perform throughout the year;

(ii) their poor scale of salary;

(iii) the question whether the operation of the new rules is likely to bring about a serious block in promotion, and

(iv) the possible practical effects of a sudden permanent change in the conditions of service and prospects of such officers?

(c) Were Local Governments consulted in the matter of the exception made in the case of ministerial officers, and did they accept the Article, as amended, in its application to ministerial officers?

(d) Is it the intention that, in all cases where a ministerial officer is considered efficient, he should be retained in the service of Government until he attains the age of 60, and the Head of the office will have no power to retire him at his discretion if he considers that course necessary for reasons and considerations other than inefficiency?

(e) Do Government propose to consider proposals for the increase of salary and the introduction of a time-scale of pay of ministerial officers on the ground that a block in promotion is likely to result from the adoption of the new rules?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer replied:—

"(a) A distinction has been made between ministerial and other officers because the duties of the former can usually be discharged with efficiency by an officer whose age exceeds fifty-five.

(b) (i) The answer is in the affirmative.

(ii) The Government of India do not consider that the scale of salaries affects the question how and when officers should be compelled to retire.

(iii) No change in substance has been made in the rules so far as ministerial officers are concerned. Article 459, as it stood before the recent amendments, made it clear that really efficient officers should not ordinarily be required to retire on attaining the age of 55. The same criterion is applied to ministerial officers under the new rules.

(iv) The Government of India are unable to admit that any substantial change has been made in the conditions of service and prospects of ministerial officers;

[12TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Meyer; Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur; Sir George Barnes; Sir William Vincent.]

(c) When Local Governments were consulted the reference was made in general terms. The distinction between ministerial and other officers was specifically proposed by one Local Government.

(d) The authority having power to fill the appointment (if vacant) has power to compel a ministerial officer to retire for reasons other than inefficiency. The use of the word 'ordinarily' in clause (a) of the present Article 459 covers this point.

(e) The Government do not propose to consider an increase of salaries and the introduction of a time-scale of pay with reference to the ground stated by the Hon'ble Member, since, as above indicated, there has been no substantial change in retirement conditions and promotion prospects."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Percentage of Alcohol in country spirits.

4. "Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether the percentage of alcohol in country spirits and fermented liquor varies in different parts of the country, and, if so, in what proportion;

(b) the actual percentage of alcohol present (i) in each kind of country liquor, (ii) in fermented liquor such as toddy or pachwai, and (iii) in country beer; and

(c) the retail selling prices in the principal cities of India of (i) country spirits, (ii) toddy, and (iii) beer, as well as of each kind of foreign liquor?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

"The information for which the Hon'ble Member asks in parts (a) and (b) of his question will be found, so far as it is available, in Major Bedford's Report on alcoholic liquors in India, a copy of which I will be pleased to lend the Hon'ble Member if he so wishes.

A statement of the retail selling prices of country spirits and toddy in the principal cities of India will be laid on the table when the information has been collected. It is impossible to give this information in regard to beer and foreign liquors as they are sold in a variety of qualities, at prices which vary accordingly."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Indian and Anglo-Indian Journals required by Government.

5. "Will Government be pleased to state the names and the number of copies of the Indian and Anglo-Indian newspapers, journals, and other periodicals which are required for departmental purposes?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"A statement* is laid upon the table embodying the information asked for by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Consumption of Toddy, Pachwai and other Liquors.

6. "Will Government be pleased to state for each of the last five years (1913 to 1917), Province by Province—

(a) the total quantity, as far as available, of (i) toddy, (ii) pachwai, (iii) other fermented liquor, and (iv) beer consumed in India;

(b) the total quantity of each kind of foreign liquor imported into India;

(c) the total quantity of all kinds of liquor exported from India?"

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[Sir George Barnes; Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur; Sir William Vincent; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"The complete figures desired by the Hon'ble Member cannot be given, but statements* are laid upon the table giving all the information that is available."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked:—

Securities deposited under the Press Act, 1910.

7. "Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement for each of the last three years (1915, 1916 and 1917), showing Province by Province—

(a) the names of Urdu and Anglo-Urdu newspapers, journals, and other periodicals (i) from which securities have been demanded under the Press Act of 1910, and (ii) the securities of which have been forfeited and the Presses confiscated to the State under the same Act;

(b) the number of such papers as have stopped publication;

(c) the number of such papers as have been exempted from the payment of deposits under the Act, as well as the number of existing papers to which the Press Act has not been applied?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"The information asked for is being collected from Local Governments and Administrations and, when it is complete, a statement will be laid on the table."

RESOLUTION RE INCREASE OF THE EDUCATION GRANT FOR THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

11-12 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Sir, the Resolution which I beg to move is that:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the sum provided in the budget under the head of education for the Central Provinces be increased by rupees 4 lakhs for the establishing of a University at Nagpur.'

"I do not think any apology will be needed from me, when I venture to make this modest demand of 4 lakhs of rupees for the establishment of a University at Nagpur in the Central Provinces, especially at this time, when all the resources of the State are being strained for the successful prosecution of the war. Sir, the matter is as important as it is urgent and deserves a most sympathetic consideration at the hands of the Government and this Council. We, the Indians, are already grateful to Government for the striking proof that has already been given of the high regard in which the Government holds the cause of University education in this country, by the promptitude with which action has been taken to establish the two Universities at Benares and Patna, during the pendency of the war. The University education is the highest blessing that the British rule has conferred upon the people of India, and the people are now wide awake to the benefits of higher education and are eager to have it as easily and as cheaply as they possibly could. Sir, the signs of a general intellectual awakening are visible all round, which is a hopeful augury of the bright future that awaits India. The people of the Central Provinces also are desirous of joining hands with their fellow brethren of the other sister Provinces and keeping abreast with them in the march of progress that they are making. We belonging to the Central Provinces and Berar recognize as clearly as others that it is University, a University alone that 'provides the best teaching over the entire field of knowledge of which its own resources and the progress of science may admit; that offers this teaching to the widest range of students and moulds and shapes them not merely by the training of intellect, but by the discipline of spirit so that wherever they go, they may be worthy citizens or worthy servants of the State'. It was the noble desire of bringing 'through the natives of India the vast moral and material blessings which flow from the diffusion of knowledge', that impelled the Court of Directors of the East India Company 60 years ago to establish Universities in this country. Of all the older Provinces in India, ours is the only 'ill-fated' Province, which has not been as yet blessed with its own University. The Government, we are glad, has already recognized the necessity of reducing the unwieldy jurisdiction of the present affiliating Universities, by means of establishing in different Provinces new Universities of a kindred type and at the same time of founding at suitable centres, in different typical areas, Universities of a type, congruous with the prevailing conditions of the present times. Sir, it will be by this means only, and not otherwise, that it will be possible for the Government to give full effect to the pious wish of our beloved Sovereign that a net work of colleges and schools be one day spread all over this land. It is in pursuance of this already accepted policy of the Government of India, that I, on behalf of the people of the Central Provinces, request the Government that over and above the sum provided in the Financial Statement for expenditure under education, a sum of 4 lakhs should be allotted for the establishment of a University at Nagpur.

"Sir, a short history of the attitude of the Government towards the establishment of a separate University for the Central Provinces may not be out of place here. In this connection, I may be permitted to inform the Council at once that the question is a very old one. Hopes for the establishment of a University at Nagpur were held out to us, when the idea of some of the Universities which have but lately come into existence was not even conceived. The contemplated University for the Central Provinces was referred to in the Report of the Education Commission of 1882. The Universities Commission of 1902 also adverted to it in paragraph 29 of their Report and bore unequivocal testimony to the fact that 'the proposal to create a new University at Nagpur had received both official and non-official support.' Later on, the Government of India in their Resolution dated the 21st February 1913 while declaring the educational policy assured, that with a view to satisfy the aspirations of the people they contemplated the establishment of a University at Rangoon, Patna and Nagpur. Not long after that, the Central Provinces Government by their Resolution No. 682, dated the 8th July 1914, appointed a strong Committee consisting of officials and non-officials to consider a scheme for the creation of the University at Nagpur. The Committee, Sir, gave a very close and thoughtful consideration, and after seven months' labour produced an elaborate report, embodying a detailed scheme for the constitution of the proposed University. The Local Government invited public criticism on the said Report and gave the people an opportunity to express their own views on the subject. The Report was discussed threadbare at the meetings of the 4th Provincial Conference, Central Provinces and Berar, held at Nagpur in the year 1915 at which I have had the honour to preside, and a deputation was arranged to wait upon the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner and place before his Honour the views of the Conference. This was done and a favourable and a sympathetic reply was received from the Government. Since then, the people have waited and waited very long and waited in vain. The people are becoming anxious, disappointed and almost hopeless, and yet the scheme has been hanging fire. For so many years past, and this in the face of repeated assurance from the Government and in spite of the sympathetic attitude which they have maintained towards this question all along.

"The Hon'ble Mr. M. R. Dixit, Bar.-at-Law, who is also Secretary of the Graduates' Association, Central Provinces and Berar, interpellated the Local Government on the subject on March 18, 1916, and received the following reply:—

'(a) The Government is not aware that the proposal for the Dacca and Patna Universities and for a University for Burma, have reached the advanced stage which is mentioned in part (a) of the question.

[Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

(b) and (c) With regard to parts (b) and (c) of the question, I would refer the Hon'ble Member to the reply which was given by the Chief Commissioner to the deputation which waited on him in January to present the resolution of the Provincial Conference. The reply was published in the press. The Chief Commissioner is aware of the interest that is taken in the subject in the Province, that in view of the voluminous criticism received and of the necessity at a time like the present for putting forward proposals which should be as practicable as possible, he must wait the detailed report on the scheme which is to be furnished by the permanent Director of Public Instruction; until the report has been received and considered, it is impossible to make a further statement on the subject.'

"Sir, I do not know of any statement having been made by the Local Government as yet although it is nearly two years that have passed since then. In compliance with the wishes of my constituents I asked the Government on 19th September 1916, if they had received any definite proposal regarding the establishment of the University at Nagpur from the Local Government, and the reply received, as the Council must be aware, was in the negative I repeated my question on the 12th September last and further asked the Government as to when a Bill for the establishment of a University at Nagpur was likely to be introduced in the Council My friend on the opposite, the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education, then replied to the effect that 'proposals have been received from the Local Government for the establishment of a University for the Central Provinces and are now under consideration. It is therefore undesirable to publish the proposals at present and impossible to give a definite reply to the question when a Bill for the establishment of the contemplated University will be introduced.' Very nearly six months have elapsed since then and nothing is known as to what has been the fate of these proposals. It was expected that provisions for the establishment of the proposed University would be made in the ensuing year's budget; but that has not been done, even in the face of the bountiful surpluses at our disposal. Sir, this means another year's delay and the Council may take it from me that this indefinite postponement of such an important measure pertaining to the immediate welfare of the Province from time to time, is having a very discouraging effect upon the minds of the people which should not be ignored. Sir, there is ample material in the Province for the growth of the University atmosphere. At present there are seven colleges in the whole Province including the newly sanctioned college for the Berar at Amraoti. Further, there is an agricultural college, a medical school for the training of the Sub-Assistant Surgeons and an engineering school, all located at Nagpur. The latter two institutions, however, have been established but lately, and it is expected that these will soon be raised to the status of a college.

"As regards the progress of education, the number of students in receipt of collegiate education is increasing by leaps and bounds. The Central Provinces University Committee observed in their Report that 'the existing colleges contain about 1,100 students exclusive of undergraduates in the Training College. We, therefore, provide for an increase of approximately 850 students. In the quinquennium ending in 1912, the number of pupils in the High School class increased by over 50 per cent. in the number of students.' In the matter of secondary education as well the Province has made rapid strides during the preceding few years. The Hon'ble Mr. A. Mayhew, the Director of Public Instruction, Central Provinces, while speaking on this subject, stated in the Local Legislative Council on the 4th September 1915, that 'last year six High Schools were opened, three under private agency and three under Government. A large number of educational sections were opened in Government Middle Schools and some standards were added. 471 additional pupils were admitted to the High School classes and 20,708 pupils were admitted to the Middle School classes in these Provinces Thus the time has come when the educational needs of the Province demand that the University already promised should no longer be denied to us.

"Before I conclude, I shall say just a few words in justification of the allotment I have asked for and I have done. The sum of 4 lakhs is indeed a very small amount in view of the needs and requirements of the entire University Scheme as drawn up by the Committee, but for the time being I would request the Government to provide 4 lakhs only, with a view to meet the cost of acquiring the necessary land, laying out sites and filling of quarries, etc. The Committee have estimated Rs. 3,25,326 for this purpose, but I have raised it to 4 lakhs in view of the considerable rise that has taken place in the prices of building materials and wages since the outbreak of the present war. As we all know the process of land acquisition is rather a long and dilatory process involving much delay, I hope the Government of India will not grudge to provide for the allotment I have asked for with a view to enable the Local Government to acquire land, etc., and be prepared to arrange for the construction of new buildings and the provision of necessary equipment soon after the Bill with regard to the Nagpur University is enacted. I do not think the acceptance of this Resolution will mean any financial embarrassment to the Government, as the requisite amount could be easily got either out of the surpluses or by the curtailment under the head of Civil Works.

"Sir, we stand on the eve of momentous changes, and in order that each Province may be in a position to work out its own salvation under the altered circumstances to be brought about by the constitutional changes now under contemplation, it is but in the fitness of things that every Province should be made self-contained, and as a prelude to that I hope and believe that this crying need of my Province will be immediately supplied."

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis:—"Sir, I beg to support this Resolution. The Nagpur University, which is so much desired by both the Government and the public, as all the new Universities in India, must conform to the higher ideal of a teaching and in some respects even a residential university. Necessarily its needs are great. Funds cannot indeed be too liberally spent to put it in a fit condition to discharge the important functions that will be assigned to it. There is everywhere in the Central Provinces a great demand for education, especially high education and education of a technical character. More colleges and more universities and more faculties are obviously required to meet the growing demand. Without ample funds no university can perform its duties according to modern ideals. It is only therefore just that we should have a larger grant for our university, and the figure suggested by the Hon'ble Mover is modest. More than half of this proposed grant will be required for the acquisition of grounds, and as prices of land are going up, it will be a good thing if the site is acquired as early as possible. This grant will enable the authorities to have this done." 11-23 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair:—"Sir, the Government desire the establishment of the Nagpur University at a very early date. The reasons for the delay I shall now explain at once. In 1913, we contemplated the establishment of a university at Nagpur, and invited the Chief Commissioner to submit his proposals for the establishment of that university. Later in the year, about November I think, he submitted a broad outline of the proposed university which he had in contemplation and informed the Government of India that he proposed to appoint a Committee to go into the whole question and submit a report to him. He submitted their Report in about November 1915. The cost according to the Report of the Committee amounted to about 90 lakhs capital and 8 lakhs recurring. He realised that it was impossible in the financial conditions now prevailing to start the university according to that scheme, and accordingly submitted a more modest scheme which required an outlay of 13½ lakhs capital and 2½ lakhs recurring. The Chief Commissioner came up to Simla and we had a conference with him; we had also the Patna University scheme before us; there were questions concerning the type of the university whether it should be of the unitary type as opposed to a collegiate or federal type; questions concerning the elective element on the Senate and Syndicate, and questions concerning the power of the executive Government to interfere. All these questions arose as I said also in connection with the Patna University and Hon'ble Members are aware of the great differences of opinion that 11-25 A.M.

existed on all these various questions. A compromise was no doubt arrived at with reference to the Patna University, but that was a compromise which, though accepted no doubt by the representatives of Bihar here, official and non-official, was unacceptable to the representatives of other universities with reference to other universities. The result was that we felt that these questions required very careful consideration; at that time the Calcutta Commission was appointed. Even with reference to the Patna University the question arose whether it would not be wise to defer the consideration of the Patna University scheme pending the report of the Calcutta Commission. In those circumstances, the Government felt that it would not be right to go on pending the report of the Calcutta Commission who were expected to deal with all those questions. Further, we also hoped that we might be able to submit the Nagpur University scheme, if not to all the members of the Calcutta Commission, to some members at least. Therefore, we have put it off till the receipt of the report from them. That is the reason of the delay. We have already, as Hon'ble Members are aware, made provision for the acquisition of a site for the university. We have allowed the Chief Commissioner the amount which was required by him for the acquisition of that site. Whether any additional sum would be required, as my Hon'ble friend seems to think, I am not now in a position to say. At any rate the Chief Commissioner has not asked for any increased grant. The Hon'ble Members will, in these circumstances, agree with me that so far as this Government is concerned, we have given indications of our earnest desire to go on with the establishment of the university. I assure them that the Government will do all they legitimately can to establish the university at an early date. With this assurance I trust the Hon'ble Member will be satisfied and will see his way to withdraw his Resolution. There are technical difficulties with regard to the Resolution as he has put it forward, but I do not want to refer to them. If, however, he wishes to press the matter to a division, then I have to oppose the Resolution."

11-30 A.M. The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Sir, I thank the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education for his relating the short history of the whole scheme as it now stands, and, in view of the definite assurances given by him and the situation explained, I beg to withdraw my Resolution. I do not mean to press it."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

11-33 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes introduced the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19:—

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Excise.	Excise.
Posts and Telegraphs.	Customs.
Stationery and Printing.	Posts and Telegraphs.
State Railways.	Stationery and Printing.
Subsidised Companies.	Protective Works, Railways.
	Subsidised Companies.
	Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure.
	Capital outlay on State Railways.

"Sir, I beg to introduce the heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19 which stand below my name. As has been the practice in former years, I will ask my Hon'ble friend, the President of the Railway Board, to deal generally with the subject of Railways. I cannot, however, pass railways by without emphasising the great importance of the special reserve fund of £20 million sterling which is being made this year. This provision will enable us to embark on fresh railway construction directly materials are available I know that my friend Sir Hugh Bray regards this 20 million sterling as an inverted form of conscience money, and doubtless he also regards the provision for railways in the coming year as a very meagre one. I agree that it is meagre, but it is not meagre because of any stinginess on the part of our Finance Member, but owing to the necessities of the position. My instructions to the Railway Board were to frame estimates for the coming year up to the maximum which could be spent with advantage. The figure which appears in my Hon'ble Colleague's Financial Statement represents the whole of what we are able to spend. My Hon'ble Colleague has been anxious to help the railways to spend all that they can usefully spend, and I know that it has been a great disappointment to him—perhaps the only disappointment,—that owing to the war we have not been able to make more rapid progress with railway development in India. The Government as a whole fully realise that the building of more railways in India is vital to the best interests of this country.

"To turn then to the subject of Posts and Telegraphs, I do not propose to weary Council with any repetition of the figures which have already been laid before them, but I think that it would interest Council to know the very heavy calls which have been made on the Department in connection with the war and to be told of the large number of the postal and telegraph staffs who are at present serving in the field. It has been with the utmost difficulty that the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs has been able to comply with the very heavy demands which have been made upon him. At present the total postal establishment with the various Expeditionary Forces consists of 23 Supervising Officers, 756 postmasters, inspectors and clerks and 659 menials, while there are 127 field post offices. The number of field post offices a year ago was 112.

" With the great increase of work both in the field and in India, it has been found that the General Post Office at Bombay is no longer able to combine its ordinary functions with that of Chief Base Office, and a separate Base Post Office for overseas forces has had to be opened there. It may also interest Council to hear one of the results of the curtailment of shipping facilities owing to the shortage of tonnage. The result to which I refer is the increased recourse which has been had to the foreign parcel post to some places, owing to the lack of tonnage. In some directions the use of the parcel post has expanded far beyond its legitimate scope. The abuse became so serious that in some cases restrictions had to be imposed. As an instance of the way in which the parcels post is used, I may mention that on one occasion a single individual in Basrah by a single post received 5,101 parcels from India weighing altogether 24 tons.

" Demands on the Telegraph Branch have continued to be heavy throughout the year, but I am glad to be able to say that these have at all times been met, although generally with considerable difficulty. At present roughly 2,500 members of the engineering and 700 of the traffic staff are working with the various Expeditionary Forces. The chief of these of course is Mesopotamia. As I mentioned last year, the unit charge for ordinary Inland telegrams was raised from 6 to 8 annas. This had the desired effect of checking the rate of expansion of the traffic, but notwithstanding this, the traffic has shown a small increase over the figures for the corresponding period last year. This has imposed a severe strain on the operative staff of the Department, and I can safely assert that had not the rate of increase of traffic been checked by the enhanced tariff, it would have been impossible to have had it dealt with efficiently by the staff, depleted as it is by the large number of men who have been deputed on field service. As regards engineering work during the year, in accordance with the policy which has been in force since early in war, no extra lines have been erected when these could possibly be deferred, but it was found that some additional lines were required in various parts of the country for the prompt disposal of the increased traffic, and that the provision of these could not with safety be postponed any longer. Accordingly, a certain number of important lines have been sanctioned, and their erection is now nearly complete. From the foregoing it will be seen that, notwithstanding the adverse circumstances, the record of the Department has been one of continued progress and the volume of the work has continued to expand. For this the staff of all grades deserve the greatest credit, and the way in which they continued to carry out their duties merits the highest praise. Government decided, I am glad to say, to ask the sanction of the Secretary of State to the grant of the same bonus to the staff of the Post Office and Telegraph Department as was given to the railways, and I am glad to say that the recommendation has been accepted. These two Departments have earned this special consideration by reason of the strain imposed on them ever since the war started.

"In particular, I should like to call the attention of Council to the good work done by Sir William Maxwell throughout the year in successfully meeting the extraordinary demands which have been made on the Post and Telegraph service not only in India, but throughout Mesopotamia. It is difficut to exaggerate the burden which has fallen on him in this respect and in the work of piloting the Department through a time of great stress and strain. I am only sorry that owing to sickness he is not here in his place to-day to hear what the Government, and I am sure all of you, think of his services.

"I turn now to the next item on the list, that of salt.

"In dealing with the subject of salt, I unfortunately find myself in the same position as I was last year in stating that one of our principal anxieties has arisen from the abnormally high prices which have prevailed. The rise in prices is no doubt due mainly to a curtailment of the normal supplies of foreign salt owing to tonnage difficulties. This, however, by no means accounts for the very rapid and speculative rise which took place in November and December last. We have taken every practical measure to cope with the situation. The first steps taken were steps in the direction of increasing the supply of salt, and with this end in view we secured rather more than a year ago what we believed was the best advice to be obtained in India, namely, that of Mr. Glen George, a highly skilled colliery engineer. Mr. Glen George gave us a very valuable report showing how the output of the Khewra mine could be increased with safety to the mine, and I may add that his services were generously placed at our disposal without remuneration by Messrs. Yule of Calcutta. Mr. Glen George's report has since been acted upon, and I myself paid a visit to the mine in October last. I hope that the net result of the improvements which have been made and are being made will be to double the previous output by the middle of next month. Apart from the Khewra mine, the largest internal supply of salt for Northern India has been the Sambhar Lake in Rajputana. In this case, unfortunately, there is no possibility of increasing the output this year owing to the heavy floods of the last monsoon and the consequent difficulties of evaporation. Apart from internal supplies, we are endeavouring to secure the assistance of the Shipping Controller in providing tonnage for increased supplies of salt from Aden and Port Said. In order to meet the efforts of the speculators in salt, we took powers last November to give priority at the salt mines and at the Sambhar Lake to indents by any local authority, and we wrote to the various Local Governments concerned urging that salt depôts should be established for the sale of salt at reasonable prices. In consequence of this suggestion, salt depôts have been opened by many of the Local Governments, and I think that you may find an example in Delhi of a depôt opened by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Hailey, the Chief Commissioner. We have further taken powers to control the price of salt, where necessary, in the interests of public safety, and these have already been acted upon in the Presidency of Bengal. The result of these steps has been a welcome fall in the price of salt throughout the country. We all recognise how important the price of salt is, and no efforts will be spared to keep the price of salt down to a reasonable level.

"The question of the high price of salt leads me on to the high prices of other commodities. I know that Hon'ble Members take a deep interest in the difficulties which are being felt by the poorer classes on account of the high prices of cotton cloth. The Government of India have been considering this difficult question with anxiety, and this anxiety, has been increased by the recent outburst of speculation in raw cotton. Any control of prices, the Government feel, can only be carried out with the co-operation of the persons interested in the trade, and with that end in view, Government have appointed a Committee consisting of :—

1. Mr. R. H. Brooke of the Bombay Company.
2. Mr. N. B. Saklatwala of Messrs. Tata Sons and Company.
3. The Hon'ble Purushottam Thakurdass.
4. Mr. C. N. Wadia.
5. Mr. Mangaldass Girdhardass.
6. Mr. J. P. Chrystal of Messrs. Chrystal and Company.
7. Mr. Pestonji N. Masani of Messrs. Masani and Company.
8. Sir. Bezonjee Dadabhoy Mehta of the Empress Mills, Nagpur.
9. Mr. Thomas Smith, Managing Director of the Muir Mills Company, Cawnpore.
10. Sir Clement Simpson of the Buckingham Mill Company, Madras.

Mr. Silver, Controller of Textile Supplies with the Munitions Board, and formerly Director of Industries in the United Provinces, will also be asked to join the Committee. The Committee will be presided over by an officer to be appointed by the Government of Bombay, and will begin their sittings in Bombay as soon as possible, and will among other things advise Government whether it is possible to fix a scale of mills charges for cotton piece-goods, and whether for this purpose it will be necessary or practicable to control in any way the price of, or operations in, raw cotton.

"In conclusion, there is one point to which, I think, I ought to draw the attention of Council in relation to the Customs figures. You will notice a reduction in the estimated receipts from Land Customs. This, though of no financial importance, has a certain significance, as it is mainly due to the abolition of the Kathiawar Land Customs Line—a change which has long been supported by several members of this Council. The Kathiawar Customs barrier has been a long-standing question of considerable difficulty, and I personally welcome its final disappearance, and am confident that the action which has been taken will be a considerable step forward in advancing the industry and commerce of the Kathiawar States. Passing to the more important figures of the Customs estimates, we all realise the effect upon our import and export trade of freight difficulties and of the restrictions which it has been found necessary to impose for military reasons. I do not, however, wish to pass from the subject without once more paying a tribute to the patriotic and ungrudging spirit in which all these restrictions have been accepted, and all these difficulties have been faced by the commercial community in this country. It is right too to express again my appreciation of the work of the Customs staff of all ranks upon whose shoulders a heavy burden of work and responsibility has been thrown."

11-48 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—"Sir, for the reason just stated by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes the Financial Statement with which we are now dealing is one of great interest and importance to railways. The Hon'ble Finance Member has always been most sympathetic to the development of railways in India. He has recognised, as every one must, the severe disability under which the railways have recently been placed inevitably as regards development. But he has not been satisfied with recognising a fact: he has provided a remedy. By reason of the reserve which he is laying by, railways and trade equally will view with more equanimity a difficult future.

"In the general debate, so far as railways are concerned, which arose out of the Financial Statement, two matters mainly emerge.

[Sir Robert Gillan.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

"The first is the enhancement of passenger fares, but as this has been made the subject of a separate Resolution, it is not necessary for me to deal with it now. I should like to refer to the second which is the development in this country of railway industries. As I explained in speaking on a Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri railways have in the past been hampered by the defective development in India of what from their point of view are the primary industries. But our hopes for the future are bright; we shall shortly get in the country the different kinds of steel which we require, plates and so on, and railways, I am sure, will do their utmost to take advantage of the change in the situation and develop the industries which this change makes possible. We have recently given a substantial indication of our desire to move in this direction by making the announcement to which I am glad that the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Kasimbazar referred, of a guarantee of 3,000 wagons a year to be built in India for ten years. We hope that this guarantee will enable the wagon industry to be established on a firm foundation in India.

"But now, Sir, to turn from our recent debate I venture to hope that I may be permitted on this occasion to deal with the subject of Railways in rather a special manner. The position of railways at the present time is altogether special, and I should like to take the opportunity of explaining it.

"In the first place, it is obvious that railways could not before the war have equipped themselves for duties which it had never been foreseen that they might be called on to perform. If there was want of foresight in this respect it is scarcely the railways that can be blamed for it: the fault, if fault there was, is common to the whole Empire. But apart from this I desire to lay stress on the fact that the railways are not merely what they have been made in say the last ten years. The materials in them and their rolling stock may be five years old or thirty; their administrative methods may go back a long time or may be recent improvements. But while there has been enormous growth there has been continuity. In the matter of personnel particularly, which is of supreme importance, if we are to understand the railway position, we must remember that railways are rather what they have made themselves in the last 50 years. The railway staff have inherited an ancient and honourable tradition.

"Now we have to consider how railways have met the present crisis. A review which I saw in a newspaper the other day, of our Administration Report, was headed in large letters 'Splendid war work.' That is the kind of appreciation which railways value in the midst of many discouragements and disappointments. To understand the part that our railways have played in the war we must not confine our views to India; we must look, I was going to say, over almost a hemisphere—Mesopotamia, Palestine and East Africa. In Mesopotamia the railways are Indian, lock, stock and barrel; in Palestine the rails that have taken the line as we were told the other day as far as Jerusalem are Indian rails; and much stock and material has gone to East Africa also. In the matter of personnel also, and it is on personnel throughout that I wish to lay stress, we have given much help. Altogether railways can well claim that their share has been one of the most considerable items in India's contribution to the war.

"Next as regards the internal situation. Sir, it gave me much pleasure to hear the other day the handsome compliment which the Hon'ble Finance Member paid to railways in this Council. On behalf of our railways, I thank him for it. I can best illustrate his statement in which he said that the railways have rendered splendid service by a reference to our revenue figures.

"The Accountant General, Railways, told me that not many years ago he consulted a railway officer about the estimate he was making of the Railway Revenue in the coming year. The officer who was a very capable and experienced man said that he thought the Accountant General's figure was excessive, because railways simply would be unable to carry so much traffic, the figure in question was 56 lakhs, and the estimate for next year is 70 lakhs, a clear addition of no less than 25 per cent. ...."

[12TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Meyer; Sir Robert Gillan.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"My friend means crores, does he not?"

The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—"I beg your pardon, 56 crores and 70 crores. I think the results have fairly astonished railway men themselves. They have been achieved by unremitting attention directed to ease the position wherever the pressure of traffic indicated a want of capacity; they have been accomplished only by the exercise of much ingenuity and above everything else by sheer hard work. And hitherto the railways have been able to claim—not indeed that there have been no inconveniences—I do not wish in any way to minimise the inconveniences which have been great, but that they have in one way or another taken all the traffic that came. In the last Administration Report the Board said: 'On no occasion, whether called on to undertake an entirely new work such as the manufacture of shell, to carry out against time the construction of new railways or to deal with a sudden press of essential traffic, have the railways failed to do what was required of them.' I am jealous that railways should not now lose credit, because requirements are rising to a point which constitutes an impossible demand on them. The primary fact which is well recognised no doubt, but which must be emphasised for any proper understanding of the position, is that immediately on the outbreak of the war the withdrawal of shipping threw on to the railways a very large amount of traffic which used to go by sea. We dealt with the position by giving preference to certain classes of traffic, coal, military stores, and so on; other traffic had to move when it could, but in spite of interruptions and inconveniences, the system worked because there was on the whole room for other traffic. The shipping difficulties, however, have gone on increasing, and the preferential traffic is constantly growing till now there is not room. A new situation is thus created, and I cannot conceal from the Council that there are very difficult times ahead of us. For this situation there is no heroic remedy possible. We are trying to meet it in three directions. In the first place, the departments of Government concerned are effecting all possible economies in preferential traffic. This is a very large matter, involving in fact, as the Council will recognise, the co-ordination of requirements with the sources of supply so as to require the minimum amount of railway transportation. Secondly, we have consulted Local Governments with the idea of setting up a provincial machinery which will enable railways to discriminate the essential movements in what we have hitherto regarded as general traffic, for such movements must under the conditions which we have now to face be given a definite and in fact a high degree of preference; on the other hand, they may be able to eliminate other movements as unnecessary. Lastly, the conditions which have now arisen justify us in pressing again and more strongly either for relief to be given to railways by the provision of a certain amount of more shipping or by the provision of more rolling stock. Under this last head, we must acknowledge that the difficulties are extreme, but we may hope that something will be found possible. I do not pretend that our difficulties will be removed; on the contrary, I must say plainly that they will increase and become more and more acute as time goes on. But when troubles come. as they must come, let us remember this. It would be absurd of me to talk of railways adopting a selfish policy, or, on the other hand, of sacrificing their interests. It is a matter quite obviously not of railway policy, not even of Government of India policy, but of Empire policy. We have taken and hold Baghdad, we have taken and hold Jerusalem. These are truly Koh-i-Noors added to the Crown of Empire. Soldiers won them, but it was the railway man—the Indian railway man—who helped the soldiers.

"In conclusion, may I go back to the railway staff. The machine is much, but it is the men behind the machine that counts, and it is the question of staff which therefore is paramount. I may begin with a railway man who has got to the very top. I saw a paragraph about him the other day in a newspaper. It was headed the Geddes Family.

"'A painful impression, it said has been created by a revelation which comes from Scotland. It appears that in that gifted country there is another Geddes brother who is not a member of the Government or even the chief of any administrative commission! He is merely plain Mr. Geddes, the head of a large mercantile concern. 'How' it is justly urged, 'can we expect to win the war if we neglect the obvious precautions for national safety?'

Sir Eric Geddes truly has had an astonishing career. It is not as if he had been a Member of the Railway Board or even the Agent of a railway; he was Traffic Manager on the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway. But Sir Eric Geddes is only one example, there is General Nash who was Secretary to the Agent, East Indian Railway, and who, if not so well known to the public, has in the Railway Administration in France followed close behind Sir Eric Geddes. Then there are numerous Royal Engineer Officers, who have distinguished themselves in the same field of work, and if these officers belong to a world-wide corps, the fact remains that they got all their railway training in India, and it is a matter of much satisfaction that they should in competition with the best men from Home have so distinguished themselves. Nor are Railway Officers without honour in their own country. When a Munitions Board is formed Sir A. Anderson has to be one of its Members. When control over coal becomes necessary Mr. Godfrey is the man chosen for an extremely important and difficult task. But I can mention only a few names, and we have to think of the whole great army of hundreds of thousands of railway workers throughout India under all their officers. It is these men who bear the burden and heat of the day and deserve the credit of whatever railways have been able to achieve, whether on war work proper or railway working. As regards war work, I may take as an example the East Indian Railway, since within the last few days I have received a fresh copy of their list of officers and men serving in the war. This shows a total of 663 men, on active service, on Government service in East Africa or Mesopotamia and on Munitions work. I congratulate my friend to my right that in this fine list there are five Banerjees. Of these East Indian Railway men 16 have been killed in action, 20 wounded, 15 died; 2 have received the D. S. O., 6 the Military Cross, 1 the D. C. M., 6 have been mentioned in despatches; 26 received commissions in the British Army in the I. A. R. O. Thus our railway men are in touch with the heart-shaking events of war. Many of their comrades, many of their relatives have gone to the front. As regards railway working the Board said in their Administration Report—

> 'The results are a tribute to the efficiency of the staff as a whole and were rendered possible only by the co-operation of all ranks from the highest to the lowest. The Railway Board desire therefore to conclude their report with an acknowledgment of the devotion to duty of all grades of the railway staff and of the success they have attained.'

"Let me add a reference to what I said at the beginning of my speech. An army is worth nothing without morale, but the Indian railway staff have inherited as I said an ancient and honourable tradition. That tradition they have throughout times of extreme stress and difficulty nobly maintained. As one who has intimate knowledge of all the facts I claim that Government, India and the Empire owe to this staff a great debt of gratitude."

RESOLUTION RE REDUCTION OF RAILWAY FARES.

12 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution, namely, that—

> 'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should be pleased to direct the Railway Board to order the withdrawal of the enhancements made during the year 1917 in the rates of the passenger fare over the Indian Railways.'

"It will be obvious, Sir, that my Resolution confines itself to the enhancements made during the year 1917 in passenger fares. I do not refer here at all to the Freight Tax or any other profits which have been made during the last year in addition to those which were expected. The enhancements to which my Resolution refers were introduced, as I said in my speech at the first stage of the financial discussion, on the ground that they were necessary to discourage travelling. I pointed out that it was not necessary in order to achieve that object to enhance the rates, as that object had been partly achieved by the curtailment of the train services and could be further achieved by a restriction on the issue of tickets and, where necessary, by return of the fares which people might have paid for tickets when they could not obtain accommodation in the trains. I do not know, Sir, upon what ground it could be justified, but so far as I can see the reason which has been assigned for it certainly did not in my opinion justify the enhancement of fares. Now what has been the result of the enhancement? We find it stated at page 91 of the Financial Statement that while 62 crores was budgetted as the estimate for last year, the result has proved more favourable, and the revised estimate was placed at 68·25 crores; and now we have the estimate for the next year at 70·50 crores. This substantial improvement, the Statement explains, occurred on almost all the principal railways, and was due mainly to larger receipts from the carriage of troops and military stores and from wheat and coal traffic. But the enhancement of rates and the withdrawal of concessions have also contributed to a certain extent towards the railway earnings of the current year. Owing to the courtesy of the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan, I hold in my hand an abstract showing what amount of increase has been earned by railways on account of these enhancements. The result shows that, as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year (1915-1916), the third class shows a decrease of 29 million passengers, or 13·95 per cent. in the earnings. Taking the whole of the passenger traffic in all the four classes there was a decrease of 36·70 millions in the number of passengers, of which 80 per cent. was in the third class; while the earnings showed an increase of 61·92 lakhs, of which 95·8 per cent. was contributed by the third class.

"Now, Sir, the third-class passenger, as I showed the other day, contributes largely to the profits of the railways, and I showed that he has been contributing to a very large extent compared to the expenditure incurred on his behalf by the railways. Even when you take account of the interest charges and of the Sinking Fund, the profits earned are not unsatisfactory. But the result of this further enhancement has been that 61·92 lakhs, of which 95·8 per cent. came from the third class passenger, has been taken from the pockets of the travelling public and added to the revenues of Government. A further result of this has been that, while the larger portion of the revenue has come to Government, we read in the Financial Statement at page 91 that under surplus profits paid to the companies there was an increase of 11 lakhs due to the profits earned in the second-half of the current year, payment of which will be made next year. While, therefore, the larger portion of the profits has come to Government, a very substantial portion has been added to the profits of companies owing to the enhancements effected in passenger fares. I do not see, Sir, how these enhancements were justified, and it seems to me that they ought to be discontinued in the next year. It has never been said that this was done with the object of obtaining greater revenues; and if it was not, but merely results in larger revenues being obtained, then the matter ought to be re-examined. What was earned last year was earned; but during the present year, both in view of the surplus in hand, and in view of the fact that it is not necessary, in order to discourage people from travelling, to keep up these enhancements, they should be withdrawn.

"If that is my objection to the enhancements already effected I have also an objection to the manner in which it was done. The Railway Act does not, so far as I can see, provide or lay down any rules by which the rates of fares should be determined. Neither the Act nor the rules made under section 47 contains anything as to who should fix the rates and rules for passengers, etc. In the contracts which have been entered into by Government with companies there is a provision fixing the maxima and the minima rates. I may refer, for instance, to the latest provision that is to be found in the contract between the

[Pandit M. M. Malaviya.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

Secretary of State in Council of India and the South Indian Railway Company, dated 21st December 1910. There it is laid down that :

'The Secretary of State shall from time to time authorise maximum and minimum rates within which the Company shall be entitled to charge the public for services rendered by way of or in connection with the conveyance of passengers or goods on the undertaking and shall prescribe the several classes and descriptions of passengers and goods to which such rates shall be respectively applicable, as well as the extent to which, within the maxima and minima so authorised, the Company may vary the said rates in respect of the distance or weight or special conditions under which such conveyance takes place or services are rendered.'

"I should like to know, Sir,—I hope the Hon'ble President of the Railway Board will tell us something of the procedure by which the variations between the maximum and minimum rates are secured. Evidently what happened, so far as the report of the Railway Board shows, was that the Railway Board felt that traffic should be discouraged, and they held a meeting at which they agreed that as a general principle fares and rates should be enhanced to their maximum in order to discourage travelling with a view to avoiding overcrowding and curtailing train services, and at a subsequent meeting they brought about these enhancements. I should like to know whether the matter was considered only by the Railway Board, or whether the Executive Government were also asked to consider the matter and accorded their sanction to the proposal. It seems to me, Sir, that the procedure by which this enhancement has been brought about, and can be brought about, is open to great objection, because here it is in the power of the Railway Board, acting in consultation with the Agents of the Railway Companies, to impose what undoubtedly is a great deal of extra taxation on the people. I quoted the other day the opinion of Major Conway Gordon, who said that any amount taken in excess of what was required was undoubtedly extra taxation; and I submit that here we find the Railway Board, either with the consent or without the consent, of the Executive Government, imposing a very heavy extra taxation without the matter at all coming before the Legislative Council and without the public who are concerned in the enhancement of these fares being given any opportunity to have any say about the matter. In the matter of freights, Sir, as there is no provision about the increase of freights in the Railway Act, I find that the Government felt it necessary last year to have an Act passed, and the Freights Tax Act—or rather, the Railway and Steam Vessel Tax Act, XIII of 1917, was accordingly passed to enable the railways to take a surcharge on the goods traffic.

"Well, that was a matter of surcharge and they may have felt that there was a special necessity for having legislation on that point. But I do not see why there should not be some provision in regard to the enhancement of fares. In England, there is a provision in the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, in regard to proposed increases in reference to goods traffic, and it is provided that the revised classification should not come into force unless it has been enacted by the Houses of Parliament. The provision shows that the Act of Parliament confirming any provisional order which the Commissioners under the Act are authorised to pass shall be a public general Act, and the rates and charges mentioned in the Provisional Order as confirmed by such Act shall, from and after the Act coming into operation, be the rates and charges which the railway company shall be entitled to charge and make. When the Provisional Order is passed, the public have an opportunity of having their say as to whether the proposed enhancements are right and proper, and then the matter comes up before Parliament before those increased rates and charges can be brought into operation. I think, Sir, that there should be some such provision in our Railway Act, too. But, however, at present I am speaking without full knowledge of what procedure was adopted in those circumstances. I hope my friend, the President of the Railway Board, will enlighten the Council on this point. In any event, so far as the present enhancements are concerned, I would ask the Finance Member of the Government to consider whether the enhancement should not be withdrawn in the next year."

[12TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir George Barnes.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes :—" Sir, my Hon'ble friend the President of the Railway Board, has dealt with the heading of railways to-day, but he tells me that he feels a delicacy in replying to the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's Resolution because of the way in which it is framed. The Resolution, you will notice, asks that directions should be given to the Railway Board by the Government, and consequently it is, perhaps, better that the resolution should be dealt with by myself. I will, however, ask the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan to say a few words about the legal aspect of the matter to which the Hon'ble Pandit referred just now. The Resolution asks 'that the Railway Board should be directed to order the withdrawal of the enhancement made during the year 1917 in the rates of the passenger fares over the Indian railways.' The great fact we have to keep in mind is that owing to the heavy demands which are made upon railways as some of the results of the present war, they are unable to carry all the traffic which is offered. This is partly due to the fact that coal which was formerly carried from Calcutta to Bombay and Karachi by sea has now to be taken across India in railway wagons. As His Excellency informed Council in his opening speech, no less than 40,000 wagons are continually occupied in this way. There are further heavy demands of a purely military character, and we are at the present time unable to carry by railway a great deal of merchandise which is necessary for the comfort and well-being of the people of this country. In these circumstances, we decided to take the step which is being taken in England and France in a far more drastic way and cut down our passenger service to some extent. The subject was thoroughly discussed with the different railways, and reductions were made which finally amounted to 16 million train miles a year, that is over a million and a quarter train miles per month. The reduction in capacity, however, was not so much as these figures would indicate, for if the trains were fewer, they were heavier, being run at reduced speeds with heavier loads. There [illegible] however, of course a large reduction in capacity. It was impossible for Government to accept the situation in which it was certain that the trains would be besieged by passengers far beyond the capacity of railways to carry them; not only in such conditions would there be great inconvenience to everyone desiring to use the railways, but the risk of serious accidents. It was essential in the circumstances to reduce travel, and the Government took the only economic step at their disposal, namely, that of slightly enhancing the fares. The measures taken have been in some degree effective. In the half year ending 30th September 1917—the latest figures which I have—the number of third class passengers on 14 of the principal lines was 30 million less than in the corresponding half of 1916. But, in spite of this reduction, there has, I regret to think, been serious overcrowding. The number of people wishing to travel has not been reduced in proportion to the capacity of the trains to carry them. The Hon'ble Pandit, if I follow his argument rightly, says—

> 'Your object in enhancing the fares was not to make revenue, but you have made revenue, and therefore you ought to withdraw the enhancement.'

I must point out to him that if fares were now to be reduced to their old level, we should immediately be faced with the difficulties I have described. I recognise fully the inconvenience to which the public travelling in every class are put at the present time. As the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea said the other day, we have increased the fares while reducing facilities, but I hope that it will be clear to him from what I have said that the two things really go together. I recognise also the hardship involved in an enhancement of fares to the poorer classes of the community. It was in fact a measure to which we were only with reluctance brought, but it is a necessity of the war, and in this connection I should like to point out that India in the way of travelling facilities as in every other way is suffering far less than any part of Europe and than any of our Allies with the exception perhaps of Japan. I regret, Sir, that it is not possible for Government to accept this Resolution."

[Sir Robert Gillan; Pandit M. M. Malaviya.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

12-18 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—"Sir, as desired by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes, I may say a few words with regard to the point that was raised by the Hon'ble Pandit. It seems to me that he was really raising in his speech the very largest constitutional questions. He desires, as I understand him, that the maximum rates and fares should be fixed by legislation. That seems to me........."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"May I interrupt my Hon'ble friend, Sir. I did not say that the maxima should be fixed by legislation. I said that there should be a provision that when fares are raised, it should be by legislation."

The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—"It seems to me to be very much the same thing. And at any rate it seems to be irrelevant to the present discussion. The method under which fares are dealt with at present may in the Hon'ble Pandit's view be objectionable; but there is no question about its legality. As he read out to us, the companies are restricted in dealing with rates and fares within certain maxima which are fixed by Government, and it is naturally within the power of Government to enhance these maxima when they consider it necessary. I should like to add that the increase of the maxima in regard to the third class was in fact a very small matter. We allowed the maximum to be raised only for mail and fast passenger trains, because some of the Agents considered that that would be desirable. Other Agents have met the difficulty by not allowing intermediate and third class passengers to travel by mail and fast passenger trains who are going for less than a certain distance, and there is in fact only one Company, the Great Indian Peninsula, who to some extent have taken advantage of the opportunity to raise, their fares and they have introduced for trains of this kind a fare of $3\frac{1}{2}$ pies instead of 3 pies which was the old maximum."

12-20 P.M. The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"With regard, Sir, to the remarks which my Hon'ble friend the Member for Commerce and Industry has made, I wish to emphasise that I do not complain of the curtailment of the train services. I recognise that in war time curtailment of the train services is necessary. My complaint is that when the services were curtailed, it was not necessary to enhance the rates in order to prevent over-crowding. The Hon'ble Member himself has said that in spite of the enhancements made there has been a great deal of over-crowding. Now the method that has been adopted to remedy over-crowding shows that enhancements were not necessary to effect that object, nor have they been successful in doing so. The means to remedy over-crowding are provided in the Act and in the Regulations of Railways. A certain number of seats are to be occupied in every compartment. Why not enforce that provision? The accommodation is limited in every train, and if the Railway authorities will take a little care they would be able to see that the number of men that can find accommodation in the trains do really enter. There has been a sore complaint for a long time that there has been a great deal of over-crowding. I am sure the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry and other Members of the Government will have read the letter of Mr. Gandhi which was recently published on that question. It is necessary that over-crowding should be prevented, and in order to do so what is needed is to issue strict instructions to the railway authorities in order to see that there is no over-crowding. Enhancement of the fares was not necessary to attain that object, and it has not been able to achieve that object.

"Then, Sir, with regard to what the Hon'ble Member said that 30 millions of people travelled less, I submit that here again it was not on account of the enhancement, but it was because there were no trains available.

"Then my friend said the complaint is that if the revenue were given up now, the difficulties which he has mentioned of over-crowding would arise again. I submit they would not. Try it, and you will find that when the number of trains is limited, when the compartments are limited, there cannot be too much of an over-crowding, particularly if you take steps to prevent it.

"Then the Hon'ble Member said that India was suffering far less than the allied countries. Now, I do not dispute that, but India is suffering to the extent that she is, and she certainly does not want to see more suffering. The question is whether in view of the high prices that prevail, whether in view of the great hardships which are already being suffered by the great bulk of the people of this country owing to the war, it is right and proper that so much more should be added to their suffering by the enhancements in question. Nobody can deny, and I am sure the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry will not deny, that the people in general are undergoing very serious hardships. It is lucky that the hardships are not of the same severity as in other allied countries, but that does not afford any justification for adding to their discomforts in a way which is not justified by the requirements of the public. If it was necessary to raise a larger revenue, and if the matter was taken up by Government from that point of view, I could understand it; but, I submit, that these enhancements were necessary in order to discourage traffic has not been shown in any way. If that is so, then I submit the enhancements should be withdrawn.

"Then the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan referred to the difficulties in the way, Now I should first like to ask my Hon'ble friend as to where was the necessity of raising the maxima? I submit that there was no necessity for the maxima being enhanced. That has given rise to a fear that there may be a further enhancement in contemplation, or that it may be resorted to in the future when it is felt that the enhancements already effected are not sufficient to discourage traffic. I should like to know where the necessity for these further enhancements of this maxima was.

"Then, Sir, my friend has spoken of the procedure and said that I have raised a large constitutional issue. Undoubtedly I have. At a time like this when the people are suffering various hardships on account of the war, sufferings which are not unknown and which cannot be unknown to any thinking man in this country, it should not be possible by an executive order to add to the sufferings of the people by taking from them 61 and odd lakhs in one half year from Railways. I do not know what the total will come to. 61 and odd lakhs is only the revenue of one half year, the first half year in which the enhancements were in operation. Probably in the next half year the earnings have been greater. In fact I find it stated in the Statement in paragraph 169 of the budget 'it is anticipated that the favourable conditions of traffic which have contributed so largely to the earnings of the current year will be fully maintained in the ensuing year and that the enhancements of fares and rates introduced for the most part during 1917 will in 1918-19 affect the rates of the whole year, and consequently add more to the total of receipts than they have done this year.'

"Now, I submit, Sir, that this should not be possible, and that if it is not right that it should be so done, then the Government should not sanction the enhancements. My friend has not answered the questions that I put as to how this was actually effected. I did not suggest that it was illegal. I suggested that it was objectionable, and I look forward to hearing that the matter had been considered not merely by the Railway Board, but by the Government of India before the enhancements were sanctioned. In any event as I said before, I submit that the matter ought to be reconsidered and these enhancements should be removed."

The Resolution was put and negatived.

[Sir William Vincent.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

12-28 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent introduced the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19:—

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Registration.	Registration.
Jails.	General Administration.
Police.	Courts of Law.
Medical.	Jails.
	Police.
	Medical.

"Sir, I do not propose to deal at any great length with the heads of the budget with which the Home Department is directly connected. There is very little for me to say, and the variations in the figures are made clear in the explanatory memorandum.

"Under the head of Law and Justice, the number of Judges in some of our High Courts and Chief Courts has been increased in order to enable those Courts to cope with accumulated arrears. In two Provinces provision has also been made for the re-organization of the pay and grading of the process-serving establishment.

"Under the head of Police, however, I should like to draw attention to one or two points. We are steadily pursuing the policy which has been developed in the last few years of improving, where necessary, the pay and the prospects of the lower ranks. The various schemes provided in this connection are mentioned in the explanatory memorandum. The increased cost of living, and in the case of the military and frontier police, the superior attractions for the army have lately rendered service in these ranks less and less sought after, and in order to obtain recruits of the right stamp and to keep them efficient and contented, it is necessary to assure them of a living wage. With this object the sanction of the Secretary of State has recently been obtained to the grant of local and special allowances to Head Constables and Constables in the Bombay Presidency and City Police and to the police in Sind, and increased allowances have also been sanctioned for the Calcutta police.

"A feature of the several police re-organization schemes with which we have been and are dealing now is that successful efforts have been made to meet the increased cost of salaries by economy in other directions, principally by a reduction of the personnel. We realise in fact that where it is possible it is better to have fewer constables and pay them well than maintain a larger number of men who are underpaid and discontented.

"The task of the police-force grows yearly heavier, and the current year has been no exception to that rule. I need only instance the troubles in Bihar to which reference was made by, I think, more than one Hon'ble Member. These disturbances have necessitated the entertainment of an additional police-force, but I am glad to say that we hope that this expenditure will be temporary.

"Another channel of expenditure under the head Police consists of grants made to philanthropic societies, notably the Salvation Army, to assist them in the reclamation of members of criminal tribes. This movement has been directed with considerable energy and success in more than one Province and is, we believe, resulting in the conversion of many hundreds of these criminal outcasts into honest and peaceful workers.

"In the Medical Department I am glad to say that, in spite of financial stringency and the ever-increasing difficulties of personnel, the administration continues slowly but steadily to expand. As will be seen, a considerable sum has been provided for expenditure on hospitals, dispensaries and grants-in-aid. My predecessor, in speaking under this head last year, made special reference to the very able control and direction of this Department by the late Director-General, Sir Pardey Lukis. And I should be guilty of a grave omission if I did not refer to the irreparable loss which the Department has suffered from Sir Pardey's untimely death. I do not wish to advert on this occasion to his great services and abilities ; I have referred to them before and they are well known to all the Members of this Council. I think they will also not be forgotten readily, but I ought not to let this occasion pass without mentioning the great loss which, I believe, the Government and the Council have suffered by his death. I have nothing else with which I need trouble Hon'ble Members under any of the heads which concern me, except perhaps to express my regret that another year has brought the Jail Commission, in the projection of which my predecessor took such interest, no nearer than before. I hope, however, that we may expect great results from this Commission when it is constituted."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—I "beg to introduce the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19 :— 12-34 P. M.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Opium.	Refunds.
Interest.	Opium.
Mint.	Stamps.
Receipts in aid of superannuation	Income Tax
Exchange.	Interest on obligations other than the Public Debt.
Miscellaneous	Mint
	Civil Furlough and Absentee allowances
	Superannuation Allowances and Pensions.
	Exchange
	Reduction or Avoidance of Debt.

"I have dealt fully with the Financial estimates in my speech introducing the Financial Statement, and they have been further dealt with in the Secretary's Supplementary Memorandum. So all that I need do now is to take this opportunity of bringing to notice the excellent work which the Mints of Calcutta and Bombay have been doing during the last two years or more. The demands on these mints for coinage, not only of our rupees and other coins, but of coinage for Egypt, Ceylon, the Straits and Australia, have been very heavy, but every demand has been met cheerfully and effectively. I may illustrate the extent of these demands, ours as well as the kindred countries I have mentioned, by stating that in the ten months ending 31st January last, the Calcutta Mint minted nearly 130 million silver pieces, the Bombay Mint over 136 million. The Calcutta Mint in addition coined 124 million bronze coins, of which rather more than 10 million were penny and half-penny pieces for the Australian Government. The copper coinage amounted to 3 million pieces, for the Ceylon Government. The Bombay Mint, in addition to the silver coinage to which I have just referred, also minted some 52 million nickel coins. In all, the two mints between them minted nearly 450 million coins. Besides this the mints have taken their share in the production of munitions, having been engaged in the manufacture of copper driving bands for shells. I think the Council will agree that this is a first-class record."

THE INDIAN PAPER CURRENCY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I beg to move that the Bill to amend the Indian Paper Currency (Amendment) Act, 1917, be taken into consideration. I explained fully the objects of this Bill and the needs which 12-36 P.

have occasioned it, first in my speech on the 1st March introducing the Financial Statement, and then in my supplementary speech on the same date introducing the Bill. I may say that although the Bill was published for criticism, no criticism was offered."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I now move that the Bill be passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to Wednesday, the 13th of March 1918.

THE INDIAN COMPANIES RESTRICTION BILL.

11-7 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to control the withdrawal of capital from the money-market by companies.

" In introducing the Financial Statement, I explained at some length the nature and extent of the obligations which the Government of India have to incur in India at the present time, either directly on behalf of the Home Government, or in the supply of funds for the finance of exports of national importance to Great Britain and the Allies. I emphasised the necessity of raising, by our loan operations next year, as large a sum as possible for these purposes, and indicated our intention, in order to eliminate undesirable competition with our efforts in this direction, of restricting issues of capital in this country except in so far as these are required for enterprises of national importance. It is not, therefore, necessary for me to say much in moving the introduction of the present Bill which has already been circulated to Hon'ble Members, as the objects of the legislation will be readily understood.

"As mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the Bill provides that no company other than a private company as defined by the Indian Companies Act, shall be registered, or increase its share capital, or issue debentures, or call up unpaid capital, except in accordance with the terms of a license, to which such conditions may be attached as the Government of India consider necessary with reference to the circumstances of each case. Very similar restrictions have been in force in the United Kingdom since an early period of the war, and also in India in the case of issues of capital by Municipal bodies, Port Trusts and Branch Line Railways. Until recently, however, conditions in India did not appear to necessitate the more general restrictions now contemplated, as the amount of new capital lost to us by diversion to non-war purposes in this way has not been very great. Now owing to easy money-market conditions, the position has changed, and we understand that large issues of new capital are in contemplation. It has now, therefore, become necessary to bring the issue of new capital in this country under Government control, so as to prevent the employment on less useful objects of funds which would at present serve the country better if invested with Government or employed on some object of national importance.

"In the recent general debate on the Financial Statement apprehension was expressed by one or two speakers as to a complete embargo on private flotations. It will be seen from the Bill, and from what I said then, that this is not contemplated. All we do contemplate is, to put such flotations under control by requiring a license before they can issue.

"In considering whether a license shall be granted, we shall, as I said in my speech in the general debate to which I have referred, bear in mind the following considerations :—

(1) Would the enterprise be likely to attract money which would otherwise go into Government loans or Treasury Bills?

(2) If so, is it still justified on the ground that it is nevertheless useful, in these war circumstances, as being of assistance in the speeding up of war material, or likely to result in increase of other production which would save tonnage on imports from Home?

These are necessarily general propositions, and each case will have to be considered on its own merits.

"Further, as I said the other day, I think there is much value in a suggestion made by Mr. Hogg in the general debate on the Financial Statement, that in some cases it might be feasible to allow a company to proceed to flotation on condition that it should lodge its funds with Government, by taking up Treasury Bills or in connection with the coming War loan, until it is able to apply them to real advantage for its own purposes.

"I may say that we propose, following the example of the Home Government, to appoint an Advisory Committee to assist the Government in dealing with these matters. Probably, indeed, two Committees, one with its headquarters in Calcutta, and the other in Bombay, since it is in these two places that the bulk of the important flotations would occur; and on each of the Committees there will be representation of Indian as well as of European commerce.

"The legislation in question being of the character of a war measure, it is provided by clause 1 (2) of the Bill that it should be in force only for the period of the war, and for six months thereafter.

"I now move for leave to introduce the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

[13TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Meyer; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"I now introduce the Bill, and move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

THE INDIAN SOLDIER'S LITIGATION BILL.

11-12 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the law to provide for the special protection, in respect of civil and revenue litigation, of Indian soldiers serving under war conditions.

"I think that this Bill will command the ready approval of Council, as its only object is to protect, during the war, the interests of Indian soldiers who are prevented from looking after those interests themselves. The Council is aware that, in 1915, legislation to effect this object was enacted, and the present Bill is only intended to simplify the procedure and to render that measure more effective. The purpose is to provide that suits in which Indian soldiers are interested shall not be decided when they are absent and engaged on active service. Under the law at present if any Civil or Revenue Court has reason to believe that any party to a proceeding is an Indian soldier serving under war conditions and is not properly represented, the Court has to give notice to the prescribed authority. The prescribed authority may, if it considers postponement necessary in the interests of justice, certify to that effect, whereupon the Court has to grant a postponement. Similarly, a Collector if he has reason to believe that an Indian soldier who is interested in litigation is serving under war conditions and is not properly represented, may certify that he is of opinion that a postponement of the proceeding is necessary in the interests of justice, and the Court then, if it is satisfied that the soldier is not properly represented, postpones the case. Both in the case of the Court and the Collector, it will be seen that it is necessary to come to a finding whether a soldier is serving under war conditions or not before any action can be taken; and to ascertain this fact frequently necessitates somewhat prolonged inquiries during which period the interests of the soldier may suffer considerably. In these circumstances, it has been thought desirable to lay down a somewhat simpler procedure, and under the Bill, if a soldier is not represented in the Court and the Court is satisfied, either by the certificate of a Collector or of its own knowledge—not that he is serving under war conditions but that he is unable to appear—it must suspend the proceedings and give notice to the prescribed authority. The prescribed authority—which is a military authority—will then certify whether the soldier is serving under war conditions, and whether a further postponement is necessary. It should not be difficult for either the Court or the Collector to ascertain that a particular man is absent from home and unable to appear in Court. The Court will know itself whether he is represented, and if he is not represented and not able to appear, the proceedings will be suspended pending an inquiry as to whether he is serving under war conditions—which is a matter that can only be inquired into by the military authorities. It has been said that a certain number of men are reluctant to join the Army at present lest their private interests may suffer, and I am sure that the Council will agree with me that any procedure which will tend to the better protection of their interests is desirable, not only on the ground that men who are serving the Crown are entitled to every consideration, but also in the interests of recruiting.

"The only other change made in the present Bill is the embodiment in the Act itself of the definition of the term 'serving under war conditions.' The words which have been used in the Bill are taken from a notification which was issued in the Government of India Gazette, and they have been found suitable in practice. It is, therefore, considered desirable to insert them definitely in the Act. At the same time the opportunity has been taken, as the amendments though small were very numerous, to consolidate and re-enact the measure in an amended form."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill, and to move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

RESOLUTION RE LAND REVENUE BEING WHOLLY PROVINCIALIZED.

11-18 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I ask your permission and the permission of the Council, Sir, to move the second Resolution which stands in my name first, because I shall have to deal with the resources of the country in dealing with that Resolution, and it might be convenient, before I ask the Council to accept my education scheme, if I were to deal with those resources. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer has kindly said to me that he would have no objection to this being done, and the Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair also does not object?"

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"Certainly. You can take up the second Resolution first."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the land revenue should be wholly provincialised.'

"The Hon'ble the Finance Minister, in introducing the Statement this year has told us that the subject of provincialising particular branches of revenue and expenditure is at present engaging the attention of Government in connection with post-war reforms. One reason why I have sought the assistance of the Council to make the particular recommendation in question is, that the subject of land-revenue administration and land-revenue is of such a highly important character that a recommendation by this Council might be of extreme use to the Government in arriving at a conclusion on the subject. The question has become one of practical and immediate importance, having regard chiefly to the reform schemes now under discussion, and I feel sure the Government will ultimately be able to accept this recommendation, whatever may be their position at the present moment. Self-government, whether it is to be reached at an early date or at a somewhat distant date, postulates this that we are on the eve of changes tending gradually towards a federal administration in India, and it is desirable, before any large step is taken, that the ground should be cleared in differentiating Imperial finance from Provincial finance, and in determining as to whether any large items of revenue should be provincialised or should be Imperial in their character I am sure Hon'ble Members will agree with me that one cardinal principle which is accepted by all is that, as far as possible, Imperial finance should be separated from Provincial finance, and that the two should be so arranged that, in the practical work of administration; there may be no friction as between the Imperial and Provincial Governments on the one hand, and as between the various peoples occupying this historic land on the other. To avoid friction between the Imperial and Provincial Governments, one necessary condition will be that, as far as possible, the heads should not be divided. It was on that basis that the people of India, assembled in the Indian National Congress, have recommended that there should be no divided heads hereafter, thereby including land-revenue under the resources at the disposal of the Provincial administration. I said that the second condition should be that there must be no friction between the various peoples in the future federal financial administration, and that we should so arrange the subjects as to produce the minimum of unavoidable friction. The example of other countries seems to show that land-revenue throughout has been largely treated as a subject for local legislation for local improvements, and the Imperial federal governments have hitherto abstained from looking to this source for the general needs of the country. In the United Kingdom, although it is not a federated Empire in the strict sense of the term, the land tax was only £640,000 as against £514 million of taxation for 1916-17. You find in the Union of South Africa, also, that the land-revenue or quit-rent forms an insignificant part of the total revenue, and in Canada also you find the same. In Australia, the same position obtains, and you find in the German Empire also the same state of things. Consequently, I am justified in my remark that the example of other countries is in favour of the suggestion that I make in this Resolution.

"Then there is another point, Sir, which is even of greater importance than the lesson furnished by the example from other countries, and that is this. Would you minimise the friction between the various peoples in your future financial administration if you provincialise the land-revenue? I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that that would be the result. Every one who knows anything about land-revenue knows also that the incidence of taxation varies considerably in the different Provinces; the tenures are entirely different, and the total amount of revenue realised in the different Provinces differs largely, and consequently in any future federation when the question is to how much each Province has to contribute comes up for discussion, there can be no more fruitful cause for quarrel than this land-revenue. I think, therefore, that it is, in the interests of future peace, that land-revenue should be placed under Provincial, and not under Imperial, finance.

"Then, again, it is more likely that land-revenue, as well as agriculture with which it is closely allied, would be considerably improved if the Provincial Governments, that is, the people concerned, have a direct and deep interest therein, and not if it should be shared either between the Provincial and the Imperial Governments. One perpetual cause of strife—if I may say so—between the people and the Government is with regard to the provincial settlements. I do not mean to suggest that in the very near future the hand of the Government will be completely taken away. I am not dealing with that question at the present moment. But, apart from that another cause of irritation against the Government is, that it is supposed to administer the land-revenue in a harsh manner. Such charges cannot possibly be brought if the administration of the land be in the hands of the people themselves, who would be responsible to looking forward to an extending revenue in this or some other shape if their future requirements are to be met adequately and properly. Therefore, from that point of view, too, Sir, I would suggest that this should be provincialised entirely. I quite see that on technical grounds something might be said for its being at least partially Imperial. It may be said that land is in a sense the property of the Crown; that the Crown should have some interest therein, and that the Government of India as representing the Crown should have a direct share. But the Provincial Governments also represent the Crown; we are only differentiating between the two for the purposes of general administration, and consequently there does not seem to be much force in the argument for imperialisation based on the general theory of all the lands being vested in the people as a whole and the Crown representing the people.

"Then, again, Sir, it may be asked whether irrigation would come under the head of land-revenue. Irrigation has, I know, been treated as a commercial undertaking; and, strictly and logically perhaps, it may be contended that irrigation should be under the Government of India, inasmuch as I propose that all commercial undertakings should be under the Government of India. But there is one strong argument against that being done, and that is, that land-revenue administration and irrigation administration are so closely allied that it would be difficult to sever them, and after all the people that will benefit thereby and who would be desirous of making a rapid advance would be the people immediately concerned, and I therefore think that irrigation administration, irrigation revenue, and irrigation prospects would be considerably bettered under the Provinces than under the Imperial Government. Of course, such help will be given and such control as may be needed, would, I am sure, be retained by the Imperial Government in the matter.

"Then, there is another point from which I view the question, and that is this: Provincial Governments and the people would naturally be jealous, having regard to the varying quantities of the amounts raised in the various Provinces, of retaining as much as they can in their own hands and in their own Provinces, and consequently the future growth of revenue would be in the direction of the growth of cesses, and not in the growth of settlement revenue; it should naturally be left to the Provinces to determine the exact form and the rate of progress under either head. Therefore, from the point of view of a healthy development of the revenue resources of the country, it is also desirable that land-revenue should be wholly provincialised.

"Then the more important question would still remain as to whether, when the Government have as in the past been looking to the land-revenue as a permanent source from which it is to meet the general needs of the country, whether under those circumstances it is desirable that they should be asked to forego it completely in favour of the Provinces. I think, whatever may be the state of the finances and whatever may be the exact method by which any deficiency in Imperial revenue would have to be replenished from the various Provinces, whether it is to be from the people in proportion to their population or in proportion to their resources as ascertained by the revenue of the Provinces, whatever may be the exact method that may be adopted, the method that is suggested by the Congress, and I think with very great wisdom, too, is that land-revenue should be wholly provincialised. I think at the present time what is needed is a careful analysis of Imperial needs and of Imperial resources, and then we shall be in a position to find that Government would be in a position to forego land-revenue for the benefit of provincial administrations, burdening them, of course, with the corresponding expenditure. There are two ways of looking at the matter: one is by taking Imperial revenue and Imperial expenditure as at present; the other is to consider what are truly Imperial sources of revenue, and what are Imperial items of expenditure, and whether the two can be made to balance one another. I take it that modern scientific opinion seems to be that the commercial departments, such as railways, posts and telegraph, etc., income-tax, customs, general stamps, salt, tributes from Native States and opium are subjects which are purely Imperial in their character. Commercial undertakings have been Imperial hitherto, and I do not think any very lengthy argument is required to support the continuation of that state of things. I think that major irrigation is a subject which might, perhaps, be deemed to require a separate treatment, having regard to the special considerations I have urged; besides the growth under that head has not been very large, and consequently, I think, it is a subject which might be tacked on to land-revenue. Salt has been always Imperial and tributes of Native States are Imperial in character, so is opium which is not excise. It is to be noted under this head that the Government derive the revenue from dealings with foreign States chiefly. Now, in regard to stamps, the question would be whether stamps should be wholly Imperial or only partially so. The stamp revenue is derived under the Court Fees Act and the general Stamp Act. Inasmuch as the administration of justice is purely Provincial, it might be suggested that the Court fees to be raised might have some relation to judicial administration, and consequently attention may be paid to the distinction, and the revenue from Court fees may be treated as provincial. The revenue from general stamps would really and properly be Imperial. Income-tax is at present a divided head, but I think the tendency of modern opinion is to regard it as a purely Imperial head, and that it should be left to the federal Government, inasmuch as it is difficult to divide it, the sources of income running in many cases into various Provinces. It is also proper that when we have a graduated system of income-tax based on the theory of a man's ability to contribute to the general expenditure that income-tax should be an Imperial head. One thing is against it, and that is that the Provincial Governments which have to collect the revenue might not have the same interest as if they were partners therein. I do not go so far as to say that, but there may be a slight inappreciable weakening of enthusiasm. Thus under the various heads above referred to, deducting collection charges, the revenue amounts to £27·8 millions. The question is what services are purely Imperial. I include therein the debt services and also the military services. There are certain Imperial services of general administration which may be brought under this head. Of course, Mint and Exchange are, from the financial point of view, of very little importance although sometimes they play an important part. The Political Department is included under Imperial. I do not think that logically the expenditure that is now borne from Imperial revenues towards the payment in England of pensions, etc., is truly Imperial in character. I think it is wholly provincial. In 1916-17, making allowance for nearly 5 millions sterling extra expenditure in the Army taking the estimates of 1913-14, we find an expenditure of 27·7 millions, and it can be easily met from 27·8 revenue. And we have also to note in this connection that under the heads which we have selected the growth of revenue is much more rapid than under those which we have given to the Provinces. The growth of land-revenue during the 11 years before the war was 30 lakhs per annum (or £20·6 million—18·4 divided by 11); if you take the longer period from 1858 to 1918, you find that it is the same because the revenue rose from 18 to 36 crores. From the incremental point of view the surrender of this revenue to the Provincial Governments is not of such extreme importance in view of the extremely large growth of revenue under the heads classed as Imperial. Under Forests the same thing may be said, the increase is small. Under Stamps it is 15 lakhs, whereas under Customs it is really 50 lakhs. The shipping tonnage was in 1913-14 17·3 and in 1916-17 it was only 11·9 million. But for the restrictions imposed by the war you could have expected a revenue of 15 millions, whereas it was only 8 millions. The table at page 77 of Commercial Statistics shows that under the various important heads, rice, wheat, etc., there has been an immense reduction in exports. Without wearying the Council by going into details if we look to the normal growth of the quantity of merchandise and its value and the increased rates which are levied, it seems to me that you can derive an increasing revenue of more than Rs. 50 lakhs annually from Customs; and the growth in assessed taxes would be about R7 lakhs per annum prior to the war, about R60 lakhs if figures for 1918-19 be taken. In regard to Railways also we have every reason to congratulate ourselves on account of the expansion of revenue, and the limits of expansion seem to me very wide and I look forward to a healthy growth without any inconvenience being caused to the people.

"Then, Sir, even taking the budget for 1918-19, I find about £33·8 millions budgetted for under the heads referred to by me as Imperial and under normal circumstances we could have looked to another 5 millions at least, 3½ under Customs and 1½ under Salt, because it must be remembered that against 4·8 salt estimates in 1916-17 the estimate is only £3·4 millions. The budget expenditure is £36 millions making full provision for an abnormal military expenditure of 29 millions; an increase of 9 millions over the former expenditure; the previous rate of the growth of military expenditure was only £1 million in ten years. Therefore, Sir, you will find that it is possible that from true Imperial revenue you will be able to finance various undertakings which the Provincial Governments have in hand after meeting Imperial expenditure, but even if my estimates are unnecessarily and unduly optimistic, there is not the slightest shadow of a doubt that the two can be made to adjust one another without leaving an undesirable minus balance. But assuming for argument sake that it may not be possible to do so, I am sure that the deficits are capable of adjustment by contribution from the Provincial governments. I, therefore, submit that the various grounds I have urged of administrative convenience, economic and financial, efficiency ought to suffice to induce the Council and the Government to agree with me in my proposals that the land-revenue should be wholly provincialised."

11-45 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" Sir, it was rather curious to learn from the opening remarks of my Hon'ble friend's speech that the people of India had assembled en masse in the recent National Congress in Calcutta. I believe the Congress was fairly well attended, but I am not aware that millions of the people of India came there; if they did it was ample justification for the measures taken by my Hon'ble Colleague, Sir George Barnes, to restrict the demand on the scanty railway stock! The Hon'ble Member also talked about federalising India, and used analogies drawn from the United States, Canada, Germany, and so forth. But federalising in these cases meant bringing together in close union States which had hitherto been independent, or largely independent, of each other. The scheme which my friend has in mind for India is quite a different one: it is splitting up what is at present a well-defined entity. He wants to give larger powers to Provincial Governments and so forth and make them autonomous—to use the term which is dear to my friend Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea. Well, I have nothing to say against that, but you cannot put it on the same analogy as the federal systems which have grown up historically in the large federal States with which we are acquainted.

" I think my Hon'ble friend tabled his Resolution before I had made my speech on the Financial Statement, stating that we have under consideration for application after the war is over and in connection with the scheme of constitutional reforms, a material advance in the direction of separating Imperial and Provincial finance which will give the Provinces larger and more independent resources and further powers of supplementing these by taxation when such may be found necessary. The matter is, therefore, already under consideration, and while the war lasts such a Resolution as my Hon'ble friend has put forward is quite academic. I think the Council will agree with me that it is impossible, while the war lasts, to diminish our Imperial resources in any way.

"Then as to the future settlements, my Hon'ble friend spoke rather lightly of the Imperial Government surrendering the land-revenue and the major irrigation revenue. As he quite rightly recognised, the connection between the two heads is so intimate that if land-revenue is provincialised, major irrigation will have to follow. At present the Government of India derive, speaking in round figures, £12 millions a year from these two heads, and I cannot share the light-heartedness with which my Hon'ble friend tackles the proposal. He seems to think that by some adjustments here and there we can do without this great sum; but I am sure it would be impossible. He quoted figures for 1916-17, which do not take into account—naturally, because it was before the event—the 6 millions a year with which we are now charged by reason of our war contribution and in which the military figures are much less than they are now. My Hon'ble friend says 'you will be able to cut down the military figures hereafter.' I do not know. Another Hon'ble Member said in effect the other day 'spend millions more on the army.' I do not know whether my Hon'ble friend's pacific sentiments will be approved by the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea and other Members of this Council. In any case, it is quite impossible for us to say now to what extent our military expenditure will be capable of reduction when peace returns, and it is perfectly impossible when peace does return that the Government of India should surrender without compensation some £12 million of revenue. That would absolutely hamper them in regard to the defence of the country, which must always be the primary consideration with them. It will be necessary, therefore, to imperialise some of the heads that are now divided: Income-tax, for example, my Hon'ble friend suggests; or, as he also suggests, we might divide up Stamps and make commercial Stamps wholly Imperial. It would also be necessary besides that (as I think he said the people of India in Calcutta assembled decided) that there should be lump contributions from the Provinces. The Provinces would get the benefit of the whole of the land-revenue and of other growing heads, and, besides other adjustments, they would each have to pay a certain amount to the Government of India for purposes of defence. Well, it is by no means an easy matter to adjust these contributions. We may get rid of a certain amount of friction by having no divided heads; but you will certainly have friction, I am afraid, in other directions, over lump contributions. My Hon'ble friend referred, I think, to the analogy of Germany. He is probably aware that in years gone by there was very considerable friction between the Central and the State Governments there as regards what are called the matricular contributions.

"But I recognise that in accordance with the scheme which I adumbrated in my speech on the 1st of March it is necessary to advance very materially in the separation of Imperial and Provincial finances, so that the Provincial Governments can get more real financial powers than they have hitherto obtained, and I would also remind those of my Hon'ble friends who chafe at the restrictions which the Government of India now impose on the Provinces that in most cases those restrictions are likewise imposed on us by the Secretary of State. So that if you are going to have any material advance in the direction of Provincial autonomy there must be decentralisation in Downing Street as well as in Simla.

"I do not wish to follow my Hon'ble friend into his examination of the financial possibilities. I think I have said enough to show that this re-casting of the Provincial settlements, which his Resolution would involve, and which in any case we are going to undertake, must be a difficult task which cannot be undertaken lightly, and which requires a great deal of detailed consideration. I may say, however, that we have put a provisional scheme before the Provinces—and even that provisional scheme cost us a great deal of time and trouble to work out—and we are now getting their replies. When we come to a provisional decision on those replies the main lines of the future financial development will be a part of the scheme of constitutional reforms which, as His Excellency the Viceroy informed the Council the other day, will be published for general information and give opportunities for public criticism.

"Well, I cannot for these reasons accept the Resolution in the form in which it stands, but I would be willing to accept an amended Resolution, somewhat in this form:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that in revised financial arrangements, with the Provinces consequent on a scheme of constitutional reforms, the question of wholly provincialising the land-revenue be taken into consideration.'

"To a Resolution in that form I say I could assent."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I have only one or two observations to make. I quite realise, and have always realised, that there is a difference between the United States or the German States coming together into a federal confederacy, and India. This is because we have here the inestimable advantage of always having had a unitary government, a government which, at present, is in possession of all the revenues of the country, and, consequently, intricate and delicate questions of adjustment would not arise in this country in the manner in which they have arisen in the United States or Germany. Apart from that, and apart from the control which may be retained, there seems to me in substance no difference in the principles we are advocating and the federal system which obtains in other countries.

"The only other observation which I have to make is that my Hon'ble friend overlooked the fact that I quoted the figures for 1918-19, also including the interest and the Sinking Fund charges. I think the revenues and the expenditure can be made to balance one another. The Hon'ble Member was right in saying that I sent up this Resolution before I knew that the matter was receiving consideration. Of course, I realise that the Government is not in a position to state more at present, and I accept the suggestion of the Hon'ble the Finance Member, and I would be prepared to move a Resolution in the form suggested by him if the Council and you, Sir, permit me to do so."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I have nothing before me yet If the Hon'ble Member can give me something to put to the Council I shall be pleased to do so."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor-General in Council that in revised financial arrangements with the Provinces, consequent on a scheme of constitutional reforms, the question of wholly provincialising the land-revenue be taken into consideration.'

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I understand that the Resolution in that form will be accepted by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble the Vice President:—"As the Resolution is accepted I do not propose to put it to the Council unless any Member wishes it formally put."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur:—"I would like to know the nature of the amended Resolution which has been accepted."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I am sorry I did not catch the beginning of the Hon'ble Member's remarks."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur:—"I would like to know the nature of the amended Resolution which has been accepted."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has read it once to the Council, and I have no doubt he will have the courtesy to read it again."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that in revised financial arrangements with the Provinces, consequent on a scheme of constitutional reforms, the question of wholly provincialising the land-revenue be taken into consideration.'

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I would remind the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur and other Members of the Council that they are entitled to object to this amendment if they choose to do so. If no Member objects, and the amendment is accepted by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer, I do not see that anything is gained by putting it to the vote."

[18TH MARCH, 1918.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; The Vice-President.]

RESOLUTION RE INTRODUCTION OF FREE AND COMPULSORY EDUCATION AFTER THE WAR.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :— 11-57 A. M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that one of the post-war reforms should be the introduction throughout British India of free and compulsory primary education immediately after the war.'

" With your permission, Sir, I would like to speak to the next Resolution also and ask you whether it would be convenient to put them separately in order to save time."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" Certainly."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma .—" The other portion reads thus :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that if the land-revenue be not wholly provincialised, the Government of India should undertake to finance free and compulsory primary education out of Imperial revenues.'

" Well, this is a hardy annual, which makes its appearance once every year; but the subject is of such practical importance that Hon'ble Members will excuse me if I intend drawing their attention once again to the subject, which has so far received but indifferent and inadequate recognition at the hands of the authorities. I do not quarrel with the immediate present, because I realise that the embarrassments of the war have prevented any larger attention being paid to the subject; but, I think, we are entitled to a definite pronouncement of policy on this large question, especially in view of the important world developments which have been taking place during the last few years, and also in view of the changes which are likely to come over the Indian administration. I am aware, Sir, that His Excellency the Viceroy has been pleased to announce that the Government have under contemplation a policy whereby this intricate question will be handled by them to the satisfaction of the people, and I am also aware that about Rs. 30 lakhs have been granted to the Provincial Governments for the purpose of more adequately financing primary education than would have been otherwise possible. I note the infinite satisfaction with which the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair reviewed the figures of the last nine years in support of his contention that the Government are, perhaps, not altogether remiss in this matter. But I hope to be able to convince the Council on a review of both the financial as well as the educational figures that neither from the point of view of numbers nor of quality have we reason really to congratulate ourselves upon what has been done, and perhaps the people of this country will not be wrong if they complain that a much more rapid advance has not been possible. I do not intend to deal to-day at length with the general aspects of the question. Last year much of what could be said really was said, and the Hon'ble Members in review of the Financial Statement, have made, I am very glad to note, pointed allusion to the need for development in this direction. I also note, and thankfully, the cordial and unanimous support of all the non-official Members on the last occasion when a somewhat similar question was raised, especially in view of the doubts which were felt by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair as to what the attitude of the Indian Members would be in regard to it. My justification for bringing up this Resolution is, that there are two or three important events which have occurred since I last moved the Resolution in which I pleaded for a scheme of financing primary education in a definite period. The Home Government, we all gratefully acknowledge, has distinctly promised that self-government is to be the goal of Indian administration, and we are at present engaged in the difficult task of settling the particular rate at which progress can be evolved during the next few years. Well, whatever may be the changes immediately ahead of us,

there cannot be the slightest doubt that we are in for a democratic form of government, and I do not think that any very lengthy reasoning is necessary to show that we shall have to educate our future masters. That alone is a sufficient reason for putting the educational problem in the forefront of our administrative problems—perhaps only next to the military problem. I have been very much struck by a book which was recently published in which the industrial efficiency of the American and the Britisher was compared, and it was shown there that with the improved machinery employed in several American industries, one American is able to turn out three times as much work as a Britisher. What the relative rates of efficiency as between the Indian and the European are, I need hardly dwell upon here. Both the Industrial Commission and those engaged in agriculture have insisted, and rightly too, upon primary education being immediately extended throughout India if there is to be any proper extension of the right agricultural methods or industrial development. Thus industrial efficiency, agricultural efficiency, the needs of self-government, the rapid rate at which other countries are competing with us, the new war problems whereby perhaps we might be brought into some sort of commercial union with other countries which may be a source of peril to us from the economic point of view unless our industrial and economic efficiency can be raised to the level of that of the countries with which we may be brought into union—all these and many more reasons may be cited for asking the Government to pay a little more attention than has been found possible in the past. Hon'ble Members might perhaps think that there has been an increased expenditure of 149 lakhs during the last four years from Provincial revenues ; but that was not on primary education alone, but on education in general, and there has been an expenditure of about 94 lakhs only from municipal and local boards revenues ; an increase of about 1 million pupils in primary schools is then relied on. But, Sir, one point seems to have been overlooked, and that is this. With all the advance that has been made during the past seven years ending in 1916-1917, we have not been able to overtake the growth of population. Taking the normal growth of 5·5 in population, you find that there has been an increase among children of school-going age of 1·7 million, whereas the number of pupils in schools rose from 4·6 to 5 8, that is 1·2 million. Of course I know that the figures for girls are included therein. Still I am perfectly justified in stating that, although the ratio of the boys educated to the population has risen relatively, we have not even overtaken the population growth, and that with an increased expenditure of over 94 lakhs. We know how inelastic provincial revenues are. At the present rate how long will it take to educate our people to the level obtaining in all civilised countries? It has been said that in various provinces Bills have been introduced, and the Government have so far kept themselves in touch with public opinion as to sanction the introduction and in some case the passing of such Bills—Bills which make it possible for local bodies and municipalities to provide, where they are willing, funds for the compulsory and free elementary education of pupils. But my trouble is, Sir, that these are but mere palliatives : they will not solve the question properly unless the Government of India is willing to undertake the moral and the financial responsibility in the matter. Our land-revenue is 36 crores ; and even assuming for argument sake that an additional half-an-anna cess can be levied in all the provinces you will not be able to get more than a crore of rupees. Taking it that the Government will provide twice that amount, the net revenue provided will be only between 3 and 4 crores, whereas even taking the 10 per cent. standard and accepting the position that only half the number of girls of school-going age can be reached, you will have to provide for about 18 millions pupils, and it would be absolutely impossible to make adequate financial provision unless there is a change of outlook—a change in the point of view from which the Government look at this problem, and until they give up the laissez faire policy and a policy of looking to small developments here and there whenever and wherever possible. The real question is, can we afford to be overtaken in the race by other races; and is not the industrial serfdom which is at present our lot going to be perpetuated if we allow Japan and other countries, European as well as Asiatic, to become industrially and educationally efficient, while the Government of India looks to the consent of the people being obtained in the distant future under proper checks and safeguards before proceeding in this matter? I do not mean it to be understood when I move this Resolution that I think the Government would be justified in undertaking this task if in any locality there should be danger of creating political unrest and discontent. I have not specified or alluded to the limitations in this Resolution, because I felt it would be making it too cumbrous to introduce the qualifications always implied. I also know that it would be impossible for the Government to force the education of girls against the wishes of the people; but the rapid rate at which girls' education has been advancing, and the circumstance that nobody would object to his boys being educated provided he is not asked to pay when he is not able to do so, make it easy for the Government to extend rapidly primary education. The only question is have they the finances to do so? But before I deal with it, let me dispose of a few objections which are generally raised.

"The Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair in dealing with a similar application of mine last year gave various reasons for asking the Council to reject my Resolution. One of them was that Mr. Gokhale was satisfied with local boards taking up this task whereas I asked for much more. The world has advanced considerably since the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale advanced his proposals, and besides that, Mr. Gokhale knew the difficulties he had to contend against and was therefore only desirous of introducing the thin end of the wedge then by inducing the Government to accept the principle. What was an impossibility then the Government have been forced by public opinion to accept as a possibility now. The whole world is moving much more rapidly, and we cannot rest content with the Government's passive attitude relying on slow developments. That is my answer to that part of the question. Is there a popular demand? The way in which the Government answer on the last occasion was taken up by the press and the people at large and by the various associations, and the way in which legislative Members rallied to my support on the last occasion are proof positive that the country is fully alive to the importance of the problem.

"Then a word, Sir, with regard to the voluntary principle which has been preached ad nauseam by the Government and their advocates. Now, two propositions have been put forward in support of it and they are these. First of all we have not got enough funds to found schools where people are willing to send their children, and consequently there is no use in asking for free and compulsory education. I shall presently deal with it. The second is, that the quality has to be improved before we can look to the quantity. Taking the quality question, I humbly submit that that very point is a strong argument in favour of my contention that, unless free and compulsory education is the order of the day, you can never improve the quality. You find that not even half the number of boys from the lower standard go up to the higher standard, and that the number of boys who are able to read books after passing through this primary course is indeed a very small fraction of the number of boys whose names appear on the rolls. What is the reason? The reason is not so much inefficiency of teaching as has been supposed; that the people are unable to pay for their education is only partly a reason and consequently some sort of compulsion would have to be employed where the people possibly do not know their interests rightly. I quoted on the last occasion a number of figures in support of my proposition that the number of pupils proceeding to the higher classes is but a very small fraction of what we should expect it to be. The number of pupils in the upper primary class in 1910-11 was 605,000 and in 1914-15 it was 596,000, and it was found that the number of pupils who could read from books was 3·2 millions and 3·5 millions or ⅓ million more only for that period. You will thus see that notwithstanding the large figures which appear as being at school as five and six millions those that were receiving real education are very, very few indeed, and it is impossible to accomplish the task we have before us unless a form of compulsion is used, and further education in the higher forms is imparted. The whole question is really one of finance as has been admitted on more than one occasion by responsible members of the Government. Now, Sir, I humbly submit that unless extraordinary unforeseen circumstances intervene the recent development in the growth of revenue is ample justification for my approaching the Council with the suggestion that the finances can amply meet my request that free and compulsory education should be imparted throughout British India. The Hon'ble the Finance Minister speaking on the previous Resolution has said we do not know where the military problem will land us; it is too soon yet to say what the expenditure will be, and consequently we can only be revelling in imaginary figures and be doing no useful task if we are to lay down any definite rate of programme in any direction before the war is over. It is because I have some fears that unless the Government is induced by the people to put this subject in the forefront of their programme, it is the fear that the difference between the expenditure and the normal revenue would be utilised for perhaps unnecessary purposes, which may be very justifiable from a moral point of view, but which the administrative conditions of this country do not permit, it is because I fear that that I have brought up this Resolution. Now, no one can say that the growth of revenue during the last few years does not justify the expenditure of be it even eight or ten million pounds a year on the extension of primary education. We have increased the gross revenue from 82 millions in 1913-14 to 110 millions in 1917-18 (revised estimate) or by about 28 million pounds or forty-two crores of rupees. Of course some portion of it would have to go towards interest charges, but even when you deduct all those charges you find a large surplus; there is at least four to seven million growth in customs; you will find under railways there is an enormous growth, and you will find there is a growth under income-tax. Putting these three alone together we find there is a growth of about fifteen and a half million pounds; and so far the permanent expenditure under the Army has been increased, if I am not wrong, only by one million pounds and even if the improvements which the Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea, has asked for be given, they would not come to about more than a crore of rupees, and would perhaps be much less than that. Assuming that another two or three million pounds would be required by the Military Department my submission is the finances of the country do permit of large expenditure towards education being made from Imperial revenues. Inasmuch as we take from the people a large portion of their substance in the shape of Imperial revenue, it would be unreasonable for us to expect them to fleece themselves more by imposing upon themselves local and provincial burdens. You will have to lighten the taxation here if you expect the provincial and local taxes to yield more. Secondly, Sir, I think that the Imperial revenues do justify the wide departure at the present moment in the desired direction, for two reasons, firstly, because it is impossible to tackle the problem if you leave the problem to be solved by local bodies or even by provincial councils unless land-revenue is provincialised in the manner I have suggested, and, secondly, because the financial resources at present existing would permit of the expenditure of large sums of money upon primary education. It is for these reasons that I have brought forward this Resolution at the present juncture notwithstanding the embarrassments which the Government find themselves exposed to, as the reforms are only to take effect after the war. Therefore I hope that the Hon'ble the Education Member would be in a position to accept this modest Resolution of mine which is absolutely needed in the interests of the people whose welfare he and the Government have at heart."

12-21 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair:—"Sir, before dealing with the Resolution itself I shall say only a word or two with reference to the general remarks made by my Hon'ble friend. I do not think it was necessary for him to dwell at such length on the value of mass education in the interests of national efficiency. I do not think there is any dispute between him, his friends and the Government on that point; nor do I think it was quite right or fair to the Government to say that we were not bestowing sufficient attention to the subject; we are devoting to it as much attention as we possibly can. I can assure him that the question is always before us, and we are always considering what we can do for the extension of education in India.

"The Resolution put forward by the Hon'ble Mover is much the same in substance as that which he moved last year. He then wished us to draw up a scheme whereby primary education should be made universal, compulsory and free throughout British India within a period of 15 years, to be introduced as soon as possible after the termination of the war. He has now left out the period. He now asks us to introduce free and compulsory education throughout British India immediately after the war. So far as there is any change in the wording of his Resolution, it is in the direction of an earlier introduction of compulsion. We were unable to accept his Resolution last year; and, if we were unable to accept that Resolution then, we are still more unable to accept his present Resolution now. Even if his object be as it was last year that we should introduce a scheme of compulsory education immediately after the war, the actual completion of which might be delayed for some years, even then I could not accept it. Supposing he had merely stated that our aim should be a system of free and compulsory education, just as he wished us the other day to declare our ultimate aim in excise matters to be compulsory temperance, then I might have been ready in this case to agree with him. He does not, however, put forward his scheme as an ideal, but as one to be introduced immediately after the war, and this is a form in which I cannot accept the Resolution.

"Now, I gave my reasons last year for objecting to the introduction after the war of any general scheme of compulsory education. Those reasons still hold good. We are not prepared to introduce compulsion, but we are prepared to do all we can to extend the existing system of primary education. We have, in fact, considerably extended it in the last few years. As I pointed out in my remarks on Saturday last, the number of pupils has extended considerably during the last few years, and we believe that in the present year we shall have more than 8 million persons at school. Some Members appeared to have doubts as to the expansion of primary education, and the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur complained the other day that there were only 31,000 primary schools in Bengal, and that consequently the distribution of schools in that Province was poor. He took the last figures available, but from figures which were placed on the table on Saturday he will see that the number of boys' primary schools in Bengal is now over 32,000, while the addition of girls' primary schools brings the total up to nearly 42,000. As a matter of fact, schools are situated remarkably near together in Bengal. There is one school for every 1·88 sq. miles. Nor do the figures of primary schools give the full truth; for the secondary schools educate a number of primary pupils—in Bengal alone over 212,000 are so educated in secondary schools. The Government of India has, in fact, as I pointed out last Saturday, continued in an increasing degree to spend money on education, and especially on primary education. As I stated, the amount spent on education last year was 468 lakhs, this year it is 502 lakhs and next year we expect it to be over 616 lakhs. So far from being a decrease in expenditure, as some Hon'ble Members seem to imply, there has been progressive increase, and the increase in the budget for next year is by no means entirely due to the provision of 30 lakhs which we are making from Imperial funds. The increase takes place in the budgets of all the Provinces independently of our grant. Both last year and this year the Government of India have singled out Education as the object of special grants. The grant made last year—a recurring grant of 30 lakhs—was made for the purpose of improving the training and pay of teachers—the teachers very largely of primary schools; and the recurring grant of 30 lakhs which we are giving this year is to be devoted entirely to primary education. I do not think that any one can say that the Government of India has been lacking in its solicitude for the cause of primary education.

"But the Hon'ble Members say we must have compulsion. Well, if you apply full compulsion everywhere, as the Hon'ble Member apparently proposes to do, you are undertaking a colossal task. Apart from other objections, we cannot raise the money necessary for maintaining it. Any scheme for the general introduction at an early date of compulsory education would be impossible.

"My Hon'ble friend says that we shall have ample funds after the war for universal and compulsory education. My remarks on this point will be general. As he knows, Mr. Gokhale calculated the cost of educating the boys between 6 and 10 at 4½ crores. That was shown to be a serious underestimate, and the cost is much more likely to be 7 or 8 crores, and indeed a scheme of this kind could scarcely be carried out without ultimately landing us in some 10 or 12 crores of annual expenditure. Can we expect to get this money or anything like it immediately after the war? The local bodies may pay a share but that does not help us very far; as, roughly speaking, the same persons are taxed whether for local funds or for Government. Hon'ble Members saw with what difficulty the Finance Member was able to give provisional hopes for additional grants this year for technical education and for sanitation, grants of a comparatively small figure which cannot stand comparison with the huge sums which a universal scheme of compulsion would entail. What the Finance Member would be able to do after the war, I cannot tell; but I may safely say that neither he nor the Provincial Governments would be in a position to meet for many years anything like the expenditure involved by the Hon'ble Member's proposal.

"Mr. Gokhale recognised this and so he introduced his modified scheme of compulsion. He wanted to give the authorities in charge of certain local areas in which education had reached a certain point a power to introduce compulsion in those areas. This was a very different thing from introducing general compulsion throughout India. We had our objections, however, to the scheme put forward by Mr. Gokhale, and we explained these objections when his Bill was before this Council. One reason why the scheme did not satisfy us is, that under a scheme of this kind the expansion of education must be very uneven and must make the greatest progress in the particular areas where education is already most advanced; which is just the opposite of what we should ourselves wish to aim at. We look to the introduction at some time of a system of compulsory education throughout the country, but we must decline to introduce general compulsion at the present time. Once we can bring a large tract of country into a state of comparatively forward education, the course will become more clear. Mr. Montagu pointed out in the House of Commons in 1912, compulsion really can only be asked where education is popular and where, therefore, the need of putting compulsion into force would not show itself to the very large bulk of the population. We are endeavouring to extend education through large tracts of country and this, we believe, we can do on the present voluntary system. We believe that it is quite possible to effect an enormous extension without resort to compulsion and we hope, when the war is over or possibly before that, to be able to put in hand some measures for effecting a more rapid expansion of primary education than that which we are able to effect at present. We have been considering the possibility of a plan which would provide for a financial programme for the expansion of primary education, without giving to future progress that uneven and unfair character which Mr. Gokhale's scheme necessarily entailed. Unfortunately just as our programme was getting into shape, the whole question of the financial relations between the Government of India and the Local Governments and the whole question of the future control of primary education was raised

(and necessarily raised) in connection with the scheme of reforms. It was impossible for us to produce our scheme while these matters were still under discussion, and we are unable, therefore, to explain at present what the scheme which we had in view was, and, until we know more accurately the form which our general plans are to take, it is impossible to say when we shall be in a position to explain as the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma wants what our scheme was. In the meantime, we have done the best we can to further such progress as can be made in the desired direction. We have ourselves provided a further liberal grant of 30 lakhs this year for the expansion of primary education on the voluntary system, and we have given full liberty to local legislatures to introduce Bills on the lines of Mr. Gokhale's measure.

"We are also ready to allow the further employment of compulsion on the limited lines suggested by Mr. Gokhale when there is a demand for it. We have done this in direct pursuance of the suggestion which was made by Sir Harcourt Butler when Mr. Gokhale's Bill was under discussion. An Act has, as Hon'ble Members know, been passed for the introduction of compulsion in municipalities in Bombay. Arrangements have been made for the introduction of similar Bills in Bengal and in Bihar and Orissa. A Bill on the same subject has been drafted by the Punjab Government and published for criticism. To all this we have given our assent, and we expect that further Bills will be forthcoming from other Provinces. All this, however, is a very different thing from what the Hon'ble Member is asking for, and we are not prepared to accept any proposal such as that which he puts forward, and which involves a general introduction of compulsion throughout British India after the war With these remarks I oppose the Resolution."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"Sir, in rising to support the Resolution which has been moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma, I must express my extreme disappointment at the speech which has just been delivered by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair. The Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair has taken Mr Sarma to task for being a little too impatient He wants him and he wants everyone of us to ask the Government to keep the question of compulsory primary education as an ideal to be realised sometime in the distant future. Sir, I feel very strongly..........." 12-34 P. M.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair:—"I did not say distant future."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"As an ideal in the future. Sir, I feel very strongly on that subject, and I must say that the time has gone by when the question of primary education could be treated as a mere question of ideal. I think the time has come when the Government should recognise their duty in this matter frankly, boldly and courageously. It will not do for the Government to take credit for having authorised local legislatures to introduce measures relating to primary education, nor will it do for the Government to refer with any degree of pride to the amount of Rs. 30 lakhs which has been allowed this year or to similar grants, nor will it do for the Government to say that the number of scholars has increased in some Provinces. Now, take a Province like the United Provinces, with a population of 48 millions and take also the figures which were supplied to us the other day by the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp. Can it be said with any degree of pride that it is a very satisfactory condition for a Province like the United Provinces to be only higher than Baluchistan in the matter of primary education. Sir, as one belonging to the United Provinces, I cannot feel proud of that state of things. Sir, it has also been said that so far as the question of compulsion is concerned, Mr Gokhale proceeded very cautiously in regard to this matter in his Bill and in the famous speech which he delivered in this Council. May I be permitted to remind the Council that Mr. Gokhale was the pioneer of this subject, and he wanted to save the Government from the rude shock of the new idea at that time? But, I should think that eight years' time is a sufficiently long time even for the Government to get themselves reconciled to the present question, and I venture to think that the rate of progress which has been maintained during the last seven or eight years is by no means adequate, having regard to the size of the country or having regard to the pressure of the demand on the part of the people in this country. I certainly cannot congratulate the Government in the same spirit in which the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair congratulated the Government or his own Department with regard to the progress that has been made in the matter of education. I do think that my Hon'ble friend Mr Sarma has done a service by raising an issue of this character on the present occasion, and I also respectfully submit that it is not right to expect the local bodies with their embarrassed finances everywhere to make further progress unless they are liberally assisted in this matter by the Imperial Government. We have to press this question upon the attention of the Imperial Government, unless we know what exactly will be the condition of the Provincial Governments after the reforms. I cannot anticipate the decision of Government on that matter, but until the present state of things lasts, I think it is our duty to press this question upon the Government and it is the duty of the Government to be more liberal than they have been in the past, and not take credit for only what they have done so far."

2-39 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri:—" Sir, I must apologise to the Council for coming late and venturing to speak on an imperfect appreciation of the points put before the Council by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair. I thought I heard him say that Mr. Gokhale's Bill was imperfect inasmuch as under it the more forward areas would have been helped in preference to the more backward areas. In other words, it enabled the municipalities which were already well advanced in education to take advantage of its provisions and make further progress while the rural areas would still remain where they were. If that is the meaning of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair's criticism of Mr. Gokhale's Bill, I venture to think it is somewhat misplaced and out of keeping with the general line of policy adopted by Government in all other matters. This criticism, Sir, is opposed radically to the very principle upon which the grant-in-aid system is based. The grant-in-aid system has been adopted as the system upon which all further progress in educational matters is to be made. Now, what is the central principle of the grant-in-aid system? Government says we will give a rupee to everybody who is able to raise a rupee for himself. Now those who help themselves, that is to say, those who have some power already, those who are able to make some progress already, will be enabled by Government to make further progress Is the principle to be given the go-by in the matter of free and compulsory education? But it is not only, Sir, in respect of education that the Government adopt the principle of grant-in-aid. There is the whole method of aiding municipalities in the matter of water-supply and in the matter of public works. You tell the municipalities in general that every municipality that wants water works for themselves and tax themselves to the extent of half the cost of any scheme that Government may sanction, will get from Government a similar amount. You do not go and say, 'well the backward municipalities shall be the first which Government will assist; when every backward municipality which cannot help itself shall have got its free and protected water supply, we will then come and think of those that can raise half the money for it.' On the contrary, Government says 'we will give help to those municipalities that can help themselves; municipalities that are already fairly well able to maintain themselves, they shall raise so much money and Government will give so much more money.' Now that system would no doubt widen the gap between the forward and the backward municipalities. Anyhow that is the system which the Government has hitherto worked on. Why that system should be condemned where free and compulsory education is concerned, I am not able to understand. Mr. Gokhale's scheme no doubt would have done that, but it would have gone on the lines already adopted by Government and recognised as sound in all legislation. Now we may ask why Government helps those that can help themselves. It is a simple matter, one effect of which is known to all who are practically concerned with the work of administration. The great virtue of the grant-in-aid system is that it enables Government to see that public funds are properly expended. Municipalities and local boards have a certain amount of independence given to them. Government no doubt exercises control, but it increases its control, makes it more minute and searching whenever it gives some grant-in-aid to a well-recognised object. It then imposes conditions, and through that means Government have been able to obtain a certain amount of control and the power of improving certain services and seeing that the people are well served. I think, Sir, the grant-in-aid system has done wonders for this country, and I hope nothing that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair has said in his criticism of this Bill will be understood to violate this central principle and impair the virtue of this system."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea:—"Sir, I must confess to a sense of disappointment at the reply which has been given by Government in regard to the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend. That Resolution says 'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that one of the post-war reforms should be the introduction throughout British India of free and compulsory primary education immediately after the war.' I think what is uppermost in the mind of my friend, and I believe that is the feeling of most of us here, I mean the non-official Indian Members, is that primary education, free and compulsory primary education, should be regarded as part and parcel of the post-war reforms. Sir, we are looking forward to a responsible electorate; we are looking forward to industrial development and industrial efficiency. For both these purposes I venture to assert that primary education is the first, the foremost, the most indispensible condition. If you want a responsible electorate, that electorate would best do its duty if it were more or less literate. If you want industrial development, you would secure industrial efficiency if the artizan and other people engaged in our industries were literate. Therefore, it seems to me that the question of constitutional reforms which will be uppermost immediately after the war, is indissolubly bound up with the question of primary education, free and compulsory. I think it is an artificial, unnatural division to separate the one from the other; the two are indissolubly linked up together; they act and re-act upon each other and strengthen each other by their mutual interaction. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri has referred to the municipalities and the financial ability of the municipalities to help forward the cause of primary education. Well, Sir, I happen to be associated with a municipality in Bengal and have been so associated for the last 35 years, and I can say this that, unless the Provincial Government or the Imperial Government is able to come forward with funds, it would be a hopeless task for a municipality, such as my municipality is, and other municipalities in the same condition (and they form the majority), to carry out this great reform of primary education, free and compulsory. Therefore, Sir, I take it that it is necessary that the Provincial Governments should come to the help of this cause, and that the Imperial Government should be at the back of the Provincial Government in this matter. It is a supreme duty, a paramount duty which the country demands and insists upon, and the country looks upon it as part and parcel of those great constitutional reforms upon which we have set our heart. If you want these constitutional reforms to succeed, you cannot possibly succeed in full measure unless and until you extend primary education and compulsory education, and unless intellectually, morally and industrially you equip your people for the great task which is before them."

12-45 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"Sir, if the Hon'ble the Education Member had merely contented himself with saying that a scheme for extending primary education throughout the country would be produced at the end of the war or later on, I think many of us would have felt more satisfaction than we do at present. There is no doubt that the Resolution recommends the introduction of free and compulsory education immediately after the war. We can realise that, for the reasons given by the Hon'ble Member, and for the reasons stated by His Excellency the Viceroy at the opening Session, the Government may not be in a position at present to put forward a definite scheme, but we want to be assured, Sir, and we feel that the matter is of such importance that there should be an assurance that a scheme for the general expansion of primary education on a sufficiently large scale is being really prepared There are two or three objections that were urged by the Hon'ble Member which require to be noted. He pointed out that at the end of the war there will not be sufficient money available to promote education in the manner suggested by the Resolution. Ten or twelve crores a year was the amount estimated to be necessary for the purpose. I never thought, Sir, that anybody suggested that ten or twelve crores of rupees should be spent all at once from the beginning of the very first year after the war. I expect that in any scheme of general primary education, there would be a graduated scale, that it would be worked out in the course of a certain number or years, and that the demand on the public exchequer would not be so very heavy at the outset as to make it impossible to be met. In other countries where primary education has been introduced, it has been introduced in a graduated manner. This is what we look for in India, but we want to know that such a scheme is in contemplation, and that the period which has been fixed for attaining the object which the Hon'ble the Education Member has rightly said should be a period of years, that the period which has been fixed is not an unduly long period. In this matter, Sir, as I have said more than once before, the people of India have been in a peculiarly unfortunate position. The need for extending primary education was pointed out in this country long before such need was recognised even in England. In England, the Primary Education Act was introduced about 1870. In India, so long ago as 1845, the question of extending education to the mass of the people was taken up, Parliament considered it and approved it, and a scheme was embodied in the Education Despatch of 1854 Since then, we have had on numerous occasions very eloquent expressions of the sympathy of the Government to the masses of the people and of their desire to extend such education. But, unfortunately, the sympathy has not been translated sufficiently into action. From the time that the Government recognised the need of extending elementary education among the masses, the Government revenue has expanded like anything. Sums, enormous sums, have been found for expenditure on general administration, on the Army and on every other subject which the Government thought it fit to spend money upon; but education has not received its proper share, and I submit, Sir, that what we want to be sure of is, that the Government should even now recognise more fully than they have done in the past that this matter of primary education has to be practically carried into effect.

"The Hon'ble the Education Member resented the remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and indicated that there was a want of appreciation on our part of the efforts which have been made by Government in this direction I should be very sorry to think that any one of us failed to appreciate the effort. We are grateful for what has been done. But we must point out—it is our duty both to the Government and to the people to point out—that what has been done is very inadequate as compared with what requires to be done. Therefore, I sumbit that, while we recognise all the difficulties that have been referred to by the Hon'ble Member, the Government ought to prepare a scheme and put it forward at the earliest opportunity before the Council and the public in order that we should feel that the matter is going to be dealt with in a bolder, in a more comprehensive and a more definite manner than it has been dealt with in the past.

[13TH MARCH, 1918.] [Pandit M. M. Malaviya; Sir William Meyer.]

"I think I must add just a few words in reference to Mr. Gokhale's Bill. I have no doubt that the Hon'ble Education Member was the last person not to appreciate the importance of the work undertaken by Mr. Gokhale. But I fear that when he spoke of the disadvantages of that Bill and of its proposals, he did not give sufficient weight to the fact that all that Mr. Gokhale was seeking to do, was to introduce a measure which could expand in the course of time. He recognised that elementary education could not be introduced all over the country at once. He, therefore, proposed a very modest measure which, if it had been carried out, would have advanced the cause of education further than it has been carried during the past many years. Therefore, the criticism that, under his proposal, the progress of education would have been uneven and unfair is not quite just to his memory. Nobody recognised more fully, more frankly, than did Mr. Gokhale, the limitations under which all these schemes have to be worked In view of those limitations, he suggested what to him appeared to be the best means of making a beginning. If that beginning had been made, we should have been much better off to-day than we are; but it is no good complaining of the time that has been lost. What we want is, that further time should not be lost, and, while we know that the Government, every member of the Government, including the Hon'ble the Education Member, must be very busy at present in considering the question of reforms, we hope that, when there is a little leisure available after this Session is over, that the Hon'ble the Education Member will prepare a scheme of compulsory elementary education which should be worked out in the course of a few years and which would require the expenditure of public funds on a graduated scale. We shall be deeply thankful if such a measure could be put forward before the Council at its next Session "

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" Sir, I should like to say a few words from the financial point of view. 12-55 P.M.

"My Hon'ble friend Sir Sankaran Nair has brought out clearly the magnitude of the expenditure to which the Hon'ble Member's Resolution invites us, and I say that it is quite impossible for us now to commit ourselves to any such outlay immediately after the war. The Hon'ble Mover spoke with his usual optimism as to the further resources we should have after the war. He talked of the growth of our Customs and Railway revenue. Let me remind him that our Customs revenue includes two items, the export duties on tea and jute, which were imposed as war measures and which will have to be reconsidered after the war is over. These bring in about 250 lakhs Also it is quite impossible for the net profits on railways to continue after the war on the present scale with justice to the railways themselves. These large profits have been very welcome to us in our present financial condition, with the strain imposed on us by the heavy expenditure we have had to meet on account of His Majesty's Government and in other directions. But these profits have been made so large by the fact that it was impossible under war conditions to afford due assistance to the railways to keep their lines going, to make good the tremendous wear and tear there has been on the lines, to make good deficiencies in rolling stock, to get the fresh rolling stock that the increased traffic demands, and so on. I say that the railway profits of future years must be largely assigned to those objects Otherwise the railways will have been very badly treated, and we shall have complaints as to the inadequacy of traffic facilities, as to the overcrowding of third-class accommodation, and so on.

"Well, it has been suggested by the last speaker that if you cannot have a big programme at once, you could have a scheme that would begin modestly, and go on and on. You would have a heavier burden each year, but still each year you would shoulder it, like the man in the Greek mythology who began by carrying a little calf and finished up by carrying a gigantic bull, because every day he had taken a slightly heavier weight.

"Well, my Hon'ble friend the Education Member has given an answer to that. It is that we had a scheme of that sort in view, but it has had to be set aside by reason of the question of constitutional reforms. Constitutional reforms have come to the front at this stage. Now, one of the essentials of constitutional reforms is provincial autonomy and 'federalisation' as my Hon'ble friend the Mover called it in dealing with his last Resolution. In any scheme of federalism and in any scheme of provincial autonomy, Education must rest with the Local Governments and with the local legislatures. You can no longer lay down a policy in this Council or by the Governor General in Council which shall bind the Local Governments and the local legislatures. If you do so, your provincial autonomy is a mockery. Therefore, the development of education will, in accordance with any such system, rest with the Local Governments and the Local Councils.

"My Hon'ble friend spoke a good deal about democracy. It may be that in some provinces a democracy would hasten rapidly with free and compulsory education. In other provinces the democracy might not be so anxious to hasten; they might prefer—perhaps very unwisely prefer—not to get educated so fast. Still under a democratic system, or an approach to a democratic system, you must give weight to their wishes.

"There was one sentence in the Hon'ble Mover's speech at which I pricked up my ears, when he said that people must be coerced if they did not know their interests rightly. Well, it struck me that I had come across a similar sentiment not long ago, and memory brought it back to me. It was a sentiment expressed by Mons. Lenin, the Bolshevik leader in Russia, when he found that a constituent assembly had been returned which did not have a Bolshevik majority, he dissolved it He said the people did not know their true interests, that they were perverse, and that he must govern them in spite of this assembly. I do not for a moment suggest that my Hon'ble friend would go so far as this; or even that when the provinces are redistributed according to his ideas, he would come down like a new Cromwell on the Andhra Parliament and say 'Remove this bauble!' But I do tell him that it is inconsistent to harp on provincial autonomy and on federalism, and at the same time to insist on an immediate programme of free and compulsory primary education which gives the Local Governments and the local bodies no option in the matter."

1-1 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Sharp :—"Sir, I am not going to discuss the general merits of this Resolution, but there are one or two things which have been said on which I thought that I might possibly throw a little light. They number only three and I shall be very brief.

"I understood the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to lament the fact that our slow progress in primary education was insufficient, or barely sufficient, to make up for the increase in population. What he said may be perfectly true, but I must point out one little matter which may be forgotten, and that is, that, owing to a change in the method of collecting our figures which had effect from 1914-15, something over 100,000 square miles, with—if I remember rightly—12 millions of population, were cut out from the figures of area and population which were included in our educational returns; and at least a third of a million pupils were cut out along with them. That is owing to the abolition of the anomalous system under which a certain number of the Native States sent in their returns to be compiled with those of British India. The anomaly was removed in the year 1914-15.

"The second point arises out of something which was said by the Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea, and, I think, also by the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru. It was said by those Hon'ble Members that the local bodies could not possibly finance free and compulsory education unless they had enormous subsidies from Imperial or Provincial resources. I think that it would be very difficult to deny that. But it may be just worth pointing out that the amount of aid which local bodies already receive for primary education from those resources is extremely large and comes, I think I am right in saying, to more than half the expenditure of the local bodies upon educational objects.

"The third point arises out of the speech of my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. Mr. Sastri criticised some comments which have been passed upon the late Mr. Gokhale's Bill and the possibly inequitable effects which it might have in spreading the benefits of primary education. Mr. Sastri instanced the case of a municipality and a local board area. I doubt whether it would be quite right to stop there. There are many districts, many sub-divisions, which show a peculiar rate of advancement, and where under any optional scheme of compulsion, such as was put forward by Mr. Gokhale, compulsion and its necessary corollary, free education, might be adopted under such an Act, to the detriment, I fear, of other and less advanced districts and sub-divisions and even villages and classes. The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri admired the system of grant-in-aid, and no doubt it has very many advantages. But I am doubtful whether that system is fully applicable as a principle to primary education. When we are dealing with primary education, we have to remember that our efforts must be directed to its spread, not merely among the more intelligent, the more fortunate, and the more advanced sections of the population. We also have to direct our efforts to the poorer sections of the population where we shall encounter many who are very poor, very helpless, and averse to the adoption, or perhaps even to the toleration, of any form of compulsion. Are we to apply here the doctrine that those must be helped who help themselves? I think that even in England the formula adopted by Mr. Fisher a short while ago for the granting of aid to the local educational authorities in England seems to mark a desire to modify the bare principle that 'To him that hath, shall be given.'

"There is another point arising out of this, and that is, that it is not always advantageous to apply the grant-in-aid system in detail to primary education. I have had a good deal of experience in going about different parts of India and looking into primary schools, and I have no hesitation in saying that, on the whole, the grant-in-aid system does not work so well in primary schools as does the board school system. And this has been recognised by others. At the beginning of 1911, we had an Educational Conference at Allahabad, at which, if I remember rightly, the late Mr. Gokhale was himself present; and it was most emphatically declared at that Conference that the board school system was superior to the aided system for primary education. For this reason, while I fully appreciate with the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri the advantages of the principle embodied in the grant-in-aid system, I should feel some hesitation in applying it without considerable modification to primary education."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. K. Chanda:—"Sir, I should like to say one word only as I do not like to give a silent vote on this important, and to us momentous, Resolution. When we ask for self-government the answer we get is, that the people are illiterate, and therefore it cannot be granted. When we ask for universal education, we are met with the objection that it will cost a mint of money, and therefore it cannot be granted. That is our position. How are we to get out of this circle? As we all know, in 1880, the system of making education compulsory was completed in England and we know the result: cent. per cent. of the people are literate. About the same time, that is, in 1882, the Government of India resolved 'that an attempt should be made to secure the fullest possible provision for the expansion of primary education by selection suitable to the circumstances of each Province.' I have quoted the words of the Resolution. 1-10 P.M.

"Now, what has been done since then? Are we any nearer the goal? I fear, Sir, that the speech of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair is only a paraphrase of the above Resolution, expressing a pious wish that that is the aim of Government and it will one day be reached. If the Government of India grapple with the problem manfully and courageously I have some hope; otherwise there is not much chance of our making any progress at all in the matter."

[Mr. Mazharul Haque; Mr. M. A. Jinnah.] [13TH MARCH, 1918.]

1-12 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Mazharul Haque :—" Sir, I am afraid the fate of this Resolution will be the normal fate of all Resolutions in this Council, it will be rejected. But there is absolutely no occasion or ground for pessimism on this question. I find that since the time that Mr. Gokhale brought his Bill in this Council there is a great change in the angle of vision of the Government of India, and I believe that that change is due to my Hon'ble friend, Sir Sankaran Nair; all honour to him for that change. Now, it is permissible to bring Bills in the Provincial Councils for free and compulsory elementary education. It was not so before the time of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair, and I believe that it is purely a question of time when Sir Sankaran Nair himself will bring a Bill in this Council to make elementary education free and compulsory throughout India. India is in need of free and compulsory elementary education. We are going to have constitutional reforms; at least they have been promised to us, and one of the moot points in those reforms, as alluded to by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea, is the creation of responsible electorates. People come forward, high officials, who say that there are no responsible electorates in India (I do not mean to say that any high official has said so in this Council, but it has been said outside this Council) and therefore it is difficult to grant responsible government to this country. Well, Sir, why have we not got responsible electorates in India? When we come and ask for elementary education, free and compulsory, in order that we may have responsible electorates, you say 'You shall not have free and compulsory education.' When we want responsible government, you say 'You have no responsible electorates.' This is merely begging the question. The question can, I think, be solved by the Resolution which has been brought by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. I shall not take up the time of the Council any further beyond saying that I shall vote for Mr. Sarma's Resolution."

1-15 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—" Sir, anxious as we are, and strongly as we feel, that primary education should be made free and compulsory, perhaps on this occasion there would not have been this feeling which has been displayed by some Hon'ble Members if the Government had taken their stand on this point, namely, that they desired as earnestly as sincerely to make elementary education in this country free and compulsory as soon as possible, and as an earnest of it they also had a definite scheme which was prepared for that purpose, but that owing to what we all know, namely, the question of constitutional reforms, that is being considered now, it was not possible for them to accept this Resolution, and their scheme which they had prepared could not possibly be accomplished. Sir, what I feel is the arguments that were advanced by the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education and what was said particularly by the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp. I am quite sure that the Hon'ble Member in charge of the department, if he carefully considers, will come to the conclusion that some of the arguments, particularly the one which I am going to deal with, cannot possibly stand the test. That argument was this, that in those areas where you have got more advanced people, in other words, where you have a larger number of boys of school-going age, those areas should not be encouraged so much as the areas where you have got very little advance, such as in small districts and villages, and that that would be a more equitable way of dealing with this question. Now, Sir, as far as I have understood, and I believe the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale dealt with this point at the time he introduced his Bill. I understand that the very object of compulsion is this: that by the voluntary system you cannot get beyond a certain percentage unless you bring in compulsion. In other words, by the voluntary system you get up to a certain percentage and then afterwards the progress is very slow. Therefore, when you find a particular district or a particular area which has reached a certain percentage, namely, that you have got a certain number of boys of school-going age at school, then it is necessary to bring in the principle of compulsion. Otherwise, that district will not make any appreciable advance. I cannot say that the argument of Mr. Sastri is entirely out of place with regard to the analogy of grant-in-aid. But if I remember aright (I am speaking from memory now) Mr. Gokhale's object was that where you have 33 per cent. of the school-going age boys actually at school then you have a fair case made out that you will not make any appreciable progress in that district unless you introduced the principle of compulsion. That is what you have got to answer, and I say, Sir, that the argument which has been advanced is, in my opinion, absolutely unsound. It is the same argument which is advanced in various other matters, namely, it is often said that you are not really fit for self-government unless the masses are educated, unless we will say 99 per cent. of the people are educated. It is the same kind of argument that we should leave the areas where we can really make definite progress alone—leave these areas in a nebulous condition—and go to other areas more backward where we will encourage the voluntary system; and, until that ideal day is reached, namely, perfection and of equalising the whole of India by voluntary system, goodness only knows when that day will come, then we shall think of using the principle of compulsion. This is nothing but an argument in favour of delay, and therefore, I think, such an argument should not have been advanced."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay:—"Sir, I regret that I have to sound a discordant note with regard to one aspect of the Resolution that is before the Council. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma asked the Government to declare 'that one of the post-war reforms should be the introduction throughout British India of free and compulsory primary education immediately after the war.' In other words, my friend asked for a declaration of policy, namely, not only that primary education throughout British India should be made free, but also that primary education should be made compulsory. It is with reference to that element of compulsion that it is my duty to voice the feelings of the Province to which I belong. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Haque has welcomed the ability of the Local Council now to tackle the matter. He might have gone further and said that a Bill for primary education had already been introduced into the Local Council of Bihar and Orissa by a private member. But what do we find? We find that there is strenuous opposition to the element of compulsion in the Bill in the Provincial Council. The matter is now before the Select Committee, and the views of non-official Members of the Council who are opposed to the element of compulsion being introduced in the Bill are also before the Select Committee. There is no doubt that very great opposition will be offered to any provisions that may be retained in the Bill embodying compulsion. There is disagreement as to that aspect of the question, and perhaps it was not necessary to emphasize it for the progress of education throughout the country. The question really is whether the element of compulsion is necessary to accelerate the progress of primary education, or whether it would not be proper to defer taking any step in that direction till such time as all parts of the country are ripe for it. 1-20 P. M.

"I feel therefore that I am not in a position to support the Resolution as it stands."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I am aware that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair has the cause of education more deeply at heart than any of us non-official Members here; that he has been strenuously endeavouring to do what he can in that direction during his tenure of office. I am aware, also, of the painful obstacles which have been thrown in his way especially by the exigencies of the war. But after saying that one cannot help regretting that the Government of India have not been disposed to give a more sympathetic reply to the Resolution which I had the honour of moving 1-24 P. M.

to-day. Last year when I moved my Resolution the Government would not hear of compulsion, would not hear of free and compulsory primary education even in cases where Provincial legislatures were willing to adopt that method. We must be thankful that there has been a decided improvement, that the policy of Government is to make free and compulsory education their ideal. While, Sir, we are thankful for small mercies and for this concession by the Government of India we cannot be accused of ingratitude if a principle which had been accepted for over half-a-century in all advanced countries of the world is now recognised here for the first time, and if we are not warm in our congratulations on the point. What we want are practical steps in the direction in which all responsible Governments have been moving, in the direction of making the whole population of the country literate, and the policy of the Government of India would be judged by that criterion and not by their sentiments however noble they may be. I am not quarrelling with the policy of Government in allowing local bodies to make a departure in the desired direction. We are thankful for it, we welcome it. The question is, whether we shall not be forgetting to do our duty, by being unnecessarily optimistic in that we have allowed a Statute to be placed on the book permitting people to tax themselves for educating their children. Mr. Sharp says that even to the limited extent to which local bodies have undertaken expenditure there has been 21 lakhs increase in municipalities and 73 lakhs increase in local boards. The local bodies cannot congratulate themselves upon the whole of that money being their own. If that is so, would it be expected that these bodies would suddenly develop taxation tendencies and make all the people within their areas literate even if Government could promise them a little pecuniary help? It is for this reason that I have asked that there should be an introduction of free and compulsory education throughout British India so that the more advanced Provinces and the more advanced peoples alone may not have the benefits and resources of the country spent on them, but that the less advanced Provinces and peoples may participate in the benefits. I have framed the Resolution in that way to help the depressed classes whose interests the Government and people in general profess to have at heart. I do not want the distance between them and the others to become longer than it is at present. Therefore in their case, as well as in the case of the more advanced people, the principle of free and compulsory education should be adopted in practice unless, as I have stated, there are political considerations making a policy of that kind absolutely impossible. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer said that I was preaching autocracy when we are on the eve of reforms placing us on a democratic basis. I am very glad that he is so optimistic about the democratic ideal being adopted in the near future, and if we shall have that I may assure the Hon'ble Member that I shall not require much assistance in getting this policy accepted. But I fear that the millenium may not be reached in the very near future, and, accepting the present conditions, I want the bureaucracy to accept the responsibility which all civilized Governments have accepted and not take shelter behind people somewhat selfish,—and I am very sorry for the Bihar people to whom I shall presently allude..............."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I hope the Hon'ble Member will not allude to the Bihar people."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"And not say that people are unwilling to tax themselves for the purpose. As an instance of what autocracy can do I may tell the Council that the Emperor of Japan had promulgated his decree that in ten years he would establish primary education throughout the land and he did succeed in doing it, and I am sure the

Government of India, if they make up their mind, will be even more successful than the Japanese Emperor has been. So I am not pleading for autocracy but for democracy, and I am sure that democracy will not fail to do its duty if called upon to do it. But when elementary principles, either of morality or of Governmental duty, have to be enforced, I am sure the Hon'ble Member will agree with me that it may be sometimes the duty of the Government to be autocratic, if it be autocratic to do so, and I hope the Government of India will not shrink from being autocratic in this particular. The compulsory attendance clauses in all the educational Acts recognise the principle. Then with regard to the revenue being sufficient, you have 8 crores of rupees of temporary military expenditure at least. You have another 5 millions open to you. You have 13 millions apart from the growth of Provincial revenues. It may be that a portion of that would be expended on military improvements and so on, but still having regard to the growth of expenditure, am I wrong in saying that you have even at the present moment funds to the extent of 8 millions that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair requires for the purpose of starting this scheme? But, as has been pointed out, we shall not require so much money and we cannot spend so much money even if we have it at our disposal, and consequently from the finance point of view, I fail to see any great insuperable difficulties. But as I have said if the principle is accepted, of course you will have to consider the export duties and so on, and it is a question which we cannot enter into now, and we have all stated our views with regard to the manner in which our revenues should be employed, and if the people are relieved to some extent in one direction, I suppose there will be enough resources in their hands which could be utilised and tapped in another direction.

"Then the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp said that the figures for 1914-15 are practically useless for comparison because they included areas which had to be excluded. We may take him at his word, but even taking the figures for 1916-17, you will find that it is 180,000 and 194,000 boys and girls who have received education in addition to the previous number, and that is less than the growth of population during those years according to the 5·5 per cent. standard. It will be much less than that, and so even for these years for which we have accurate figures we have not been credited . . ."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sharp:—"May I point out, Sir, that I did not assert that the reduction to which I referred balances in any way the growth of population. I merely made a statement of fact."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Then, Sir, just a few words with regard to the expressions of opinion given by the Hon'ble Mr. Sahay. I can understand why it is that gentlemen of his Province, where the land-revenue is so small and has been permanently settled for a number of years, should be so reluctant to appreciate the benefits of compulsion. But that is the reason why I have asked for the application of the principle in all cases alike in favour of Provinces where the people are backward or may be unwilling for various reasons as in the case of Provinces where the people are willing as in the case of the United Provinces; but when they may be very poor it is only in cases of unwillingness that we shall have to enforce primary education, and therein comes the need for invoking the assistance of the Government of India. Well, the controversy with regard to grant-in-aid and local board system does not properly arise, but what I want is that the thing should be done, whether it is done through the instrumentality of the Local Board or through the instrumentality of aided education, I do not mind which for the purposes of the present argument, as either will lead to the same goal, and I shall not therefore take up that particular point. I hope, Sir, that the Resolution will be considered more sympathetically, and the Government of India may, perhaps, be induced by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair to change their policy in this direction."

RESOLUTION RE FINANCING OF PRIMARY EDUCATION OUT OF IMPERIAL REVENUES.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I have already discussed this Resolution, when speaking of the Education Resolution, and, inasmuch as I have already accepted the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer with regard to the Finance Resolution, I beg leave to withdraw this, if the Council will permit me to do so. The question of the provincialisation of land-revenue is under consideration, and I therefore think there is no use in pressing it."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

13TH MARCH, 1918.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

RESOLUTION RE POLICE SERVICE RE-ORGANIZATION.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Sir, I to move that— 2-53 P. M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Government of India should recommend to the Secretary of State for India—

(1) that the age-limits for the examination for admission into the Indian Police Service be raised from 19—21 to 21—23 ;

(2) that the pensions and salaries of officers of the Indian Police Service should not be enhanced, as has been recommended by the Public Services Commission ;

(3) that the rule which requires that candidates for the examination for the Indian Police Service shall be of pure European descent should be abrogated ; and,

(4) that the said examination should be held simultaneously in India and in England ;

or, if the last recommendation be not accepted, that not less than one-half of the total number of posts in the Indian Police Service should be recruited by an open competitive examination held for the purpose in India.'

"The Council is aware that there is much dissatisfaction among Indians owing to the restrictions which are placed upon their admission into the Indian Police Service. The examination for it is held only in England, and the result of it is that of the 397 appointments which were held by Superintendents of Police in India on the 1st of April 1917, only nine were held by Indians. This is clearly unsatisfactory. We had hoped that the Royal Commission on the Public Services would make recommendations which would remove this dissatisfaction. But, unfortunately, their recommendations have not been in that direction. They have not recommended that the examination should be held simultaneously in India and England, and they have proposed that the age-limit for the examination for entry into the Indian Police Service should remain where it is, that is, from 19 to 21 years. Hitherto there was a restriction imposed that candidates who were to compete for the Indian Police Service should be British subjects of pure European descent. This was naturally felt to be a violation of the promise held out to us by the Act of 1833, and the Commission recognised that this objection deserved to be met. Without admitting that this was illegal or opposed to the Act of 1833, they yet recommended that the present rule should be modified to allow both Europeans of mixed descent and Indians of unmixed Asiatic descent to be admitted as candidates for this examination. But they have unfortunately provided that such Europeans of mixed descent and Indians of unmixed descent should be admitted 'who have been educated in the United Kingdom for a period of five years prior to the examination.' Now, Sir, that was clearly taking away with one hand what it was pretended to give by the other. As I have said before, candidates are required to appear for the examination in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin at the age of 19. In order that an Indian should appear at the examination at the age of 19 he must be in the United Kingdom at the age of 14 or a little earlier. That is clearly making it impossible for Indians to compete at this examination. The Commission themselves felt that this would be the result, because they expressly recognised 'that this will not provide for any substantial advance in the employment of statutory natives of India,' and therefore they devised another means for securing that object. They recommended that 10 per cent. of the Superintendentships should be set apart at once to be filled by promotion from the ranks of Deputy Superintendents, and that the percentage should be raised ultimately to 20; but this cannot meet the requirements of the situation. Hence my Resolution.

"The first point that I urge is that the age-limit should be raised from 19—21 to 21—23. The age-limit for the Indian Civil Service examination is now 22—24. It has been so since 1905. Earlier than that there had been great variations; but from 1892 up to this time the age-limit has ranged between 21 and 24. The present limit of 19—21 means, as I have said above, that

Indians must go to England at the age of 14 or earlier. The condition proposed that a candidate must have been educated in the United Kingdom for a period of years prior to the examination makes it inevitable why this condition of five years' education should have been imposed ; but anyhow whether this limit stands or not, and apart from it, I urge that the age-limits should be raised from 19—21 to 21—23, because if you raise the age for the Indian Civil Service examination to 22—24, as it has been since 1905, there is no reason why a lower age should be prescribed for admission into the Indian Police Service. Sir Mahadeo Chaubal felt that this condition of five years' previous study in England, coupled with the age-limit of 19—21, would limit the recruitment of Indians ; and he recommended that the age of candidates for this examination should range between 21 and 23.

" My second point, Sir, relates to pensions and salaries. The Commission recognised that only a few years ago the Police Commission had made recommendations, and on the basis of those recommendations, the salaries of officers of the Indian Police Service had been revised and the pay of Assistant Superintendents had been raised from Rs. 400 to 500 per mensem. They recognise that there was no justification for a further all-round increase of pay which members of the Police Service had asked for. They have made recommendations which would add to the annual expenditure by over one lakh of rupees. I submit, Sir, that there is no justification for these salaries being increased, and that the recommendation on this head should not be accepted. The Commission, it is true, have given their reasons for making the recommendations, but I submit that those reasons do not amount to anything more than that, because salaries have been advanced in other departments, salaries should be advanced in this department also. With regard to pensions also, they have said that all officers, except officers of the Indian Civil Service, should in future be placed under the new pension scheme which they have recommended. Now, Sir, I lodge a general protest against that scheme, and I submit that the increase of pensions which has been proposed in the case of the Indian Police Service should not be made.

" As regards the third clause of my Resolution, I have already spoken about the rule which requires candidates for the Indian Police Service to be of pure European descent ; and to the fact that the recommendation of the majority of the Commission that the rule should be modified is nullified by the condition which they have imposed of five years' previous education in the United Kingdom prior to the competitive test. I do not think, Sir, that any reason can be assigned for fixing a term of five years for the Police Service examination, when three years have been prescribed in the case of the Indian Civil Service, except this, that the Commission found they had recommended that the age for the Indian Civil Service should be 17—19 ; and, as they imposed a limit of three years in the case of the Indian Civil Service, they thought that as the youngest age for admission into the Indian Police Service was 19 they ought to add two years more in order that the candidate should appear there after five years. But there is no other reason given as to why the period should be five years. Mr. Madge, who represented the Anglo-Indian community on the Commission, also lodged a vigorous protest on this point, and he urged that the recruitment of Europeans of mixed descent and of Indians of unmixed descent should be without any qualification. I submit, Sir, that this rule which requires that candidates should be of pure European descent should be abrogated entirely without any such restriction as has been suggested by the Public Services Commission.

" The last point which I have taken in my Resolution is that the competitive examination for admission into the Indian Police Service should be held simultaneously in India and in England. We have repeatedly urged that the examination for admission into the Indian Civil Service should be held in India and in England, and all the reasons we have urged in support of that proposition apply with greater force to the examination for admission into the Indian Police Service. The Indian Police Service certainly cannot claim to stand on the same high footing as the Indian Civil Service ; and there is much less reason why Indians should not be given every facility to enter the Police

Service of their own country. We have got a large number of capable young men of good education and social position who would be glad to compete for the Service. I submit, Sir, that at this era of the history of British Indian administration the Government should recognise the justice and force of the contention that an examination for admission into the Indian Police Service should be held in India. Some people might go further and claim that it should be held only in India and not in England at all; but that is not what I propose All that I ask is, that the examination should be held simultaneously in both countries, so that the English and the Indian candidate might be placed on a footing of equality so far as competition is concerned. Until this is done, Indians will not have a fair chance at this examination; and there is no reason why they should not have. The Government have recognised the worth of Indians for holding high offices in the service of their country, in the Executive Council of the Governor General, in the Council of the Secretary of State, as Chief Justice, as Judges of the High Court, as Magistrates and Commissioners, as Sessions Judges, and in various other capacities. Indians have rendered a good account of themselves in all departments into which they have found an admission, and it would be absurd to say that Indians do not possess the qualities which are required in the higher ranks of the Police Service. Wherever Indians have been tried in high offices they have proved themselves to be worthy of the offices which they have held, and I submit that it is in every way just and proper that the restrictions which exist in the way of employing Indians in the Police Service should be removed by the examination being held simultaneously in India and England.

"If this recommendation should still unfortunately not commend itself to Government, then I would submit that the recommendation contained in the last alternative clause should be accepted, that is to say, that not less than one-half of the total number of posts in the Indian Police Service should be recruited by an open competitive examination held for the purpose in India. The Commission have recommended that 10 per cent of the Superintendentships should be set apart to be filled by promoted Deputy Superintendents, and that ultimately this percentage should be raised to 20. This is not sufficient to do justice to the claims of educated Indians, nor sufficient to meet the requirements of good administration in the country. The least that ought to be done is that half the total number of the posts in the Service should be reserved to be recruited by an open competitive examination held in India. It may be said by some that an open competitive examination is not the best means of finding out who are the best men for the Police Service. I submit, Sir, that until a trial has been given to such a system, nobody can justly say that it will not be found to be suitable. When in other departments the best practicable means has been found to be the open competitive examination, the same rule should be applied to the Indian Police Service. It may be urged that there are certain qualities which cannot be tested by an examination. I submit that a good intellectual education and the moral worth which it generally develops would ordinarily furnish the amount of ability, character and integrity that is needed in a police officer of the highest grade; and if the system is tried, the results are likely to prove more satisfactory than is imagined in some quarters. In any case unless the system is tried it cannot be reasonably ruled out of Court. The present system is certainly not satisfactory, and as no other system has been suggested, by which candidates for the Police Service should be recruited, I submit that this system ought to be tried.

"It may be urged that there are parts of the country where the people are not sufficiently advanced in education; if that should be so in some parts, the system of competition may, where necessary, be somewhat modified; for instance, out of the candidates who succeed best in a competitive examination, the desired number of the best of those who belong to certain castes or communities may be picked out and appointed in preference to those who may belong to other communities. I say that such a course can be adopted where it may be found to be necessary. But I expect that, in view of the progress in education which has happily been made by Hindus and Muhammadans, Indian Christians and Parsees, i.e., generally by all communities, it is likely that a fair number of the young men of every important community will find their places in a competitive examination. If however, as I say, experience should show that they are not able to secure a fair number of posts through such an examination, then some qualification might be introduced such as I have indicated, and the best men out of the candidates of a particular community or communities may be selected out of those who competed. My point is that the men who should join the Service should be the best from among the youth of every community who will compete; that no one should be appointed by nomination, but only those should be appointed who have been found by a competitive test to be the best among their community.

"I do not think, Sir, I need detain the Council any longer. I hope that the Resolution will meet with the approval of the Government."

3-8 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Kesteven :—" Sir, I should like to offer a very few remarks on the subject of this Resolution from the humble standpoint of the man in the street, by which I mean the street of Calcutta. I take it there is no doubt that the Resolution aims at the substitution in the Police Service of Indians for Englishmen throughout, the substitution to be complete and to be carried out as soon as possible, the sooner the better. From one point of view it may be that some sympathy may be found for this end. But I would ask the Council greatly to hesitate before they give it any support and to deny it all support on this occasion. Most of the world, I think, are inclined to take the services of the police very much for granted. We are apt, I think, in ordinary circumstances to forget how much we owe to them, not only for the security of our lives and property, but also for many of the conveniences and comforts of our every-day life. That is for those who are more happily situated than we are in India. Especially is it not the case of those who like myself, live in Calcutta. For the last ten years and upwards we have had to accustom ourselves to the shock when opening our morning papers of finding reports of outrages and crimes of a special kind and of an aggravated and desperate character, some of them occurring in our midst in the town in which we live and some of them near at hand in our Province. We have had to read of conspiracies, to manufacture and throw bombs, of murder and assassination by bomb, by pistol and by other weapons, dacoities with violence some of them committed in the broad light of day with a conspicuous contempt for any precaution of concealment. The Hon'ble Mover is more fortunate in coming from a Province which, so far as I am aware, has been singularly free from crime of this character. Still, I take it that crimes and outrages of this kind must be a matter for very grave concern and apprehension throughout the whole of India and to all those who live in this country; and I must suppose the Hon'ble Pandit to have the same feelings as I have on the subject. More recently we have been glad to notice a diminution in crime of this character, and this gives us some encouragement to hope that things are on their way to something better, and that these crimes may be in course of being stamped out. But this may possibly be due to temporary and special causes, and in any case the time has not yet come when we can look forward with any confidence to a realisation of that hope. Still we know that a very great deal has been done, splendid work has been done, in grappling with and stamping out this class of crime; we have seen that a great deal is being done and are told—and I am sure we all believe it—of a very much larger body of work which is being done in this direction and which we have not seen. By whom has that work been done, I ask? It has been done, I say unhesitatingly by the police, entirely by the police, and by the police, I mean the Police Service as now constituted. I do not wish to forget the magnificent work, the splendid part in this work, which has been taken by Indian members of the police forces, many of whom have on various occasions shown a devotion and bravery beyond all praise, and have, some of them, paid the extreme penalty with their lives; but they are part of the system which the Resolution seeks to have altered and which I wish to see retained. Nor do I wish to lay too much stress on the fact that what has been done by them has been done under the guidance and direction of their superior European officers. But such is the case, and as I have already said they are all part of the system. Is this the time, I would ask the Council, are these the conditions in which we can contemplate such a drastic and sweeping change as that which is aimed at by this Resolution? It seems to me that this would be a desperate case of changing horses while crossing the stream, and I venture to submit to the Council that the time when these changes can even be contemplated will not arrive until we can say with confidence that crime and outrages of this nature have been definitely stamped out and become things of the past.

"Another matter to which I would refer, and which I think may perhaps be lost sight of, is that in the presidency-towns, especially in Calcutta, where I live, there is a very large European population with very large vested interests which have to be preserved and protected. I submit that that population is entitled to have the protection of European police who understand their interests and what is necessary to protect them and, are, so to speak, members of their own community. To descend to smaller matters, in recent years we have been more and more introducing into the regulation of our cities Western methods and systems in such matters as control of traffic. This is a small matter, but I refer to it as illustrative of many others that can be found. For the direction of such matters as these, it appears to me that for a long time to come there will have to be a considerable body of Europeans at the head of the Police. All these are matters that are not unimportant in themselves; but, being more or less local matters, are of minor importance in comparison with the broader issues. I would, therefore, prefer to leave my argument with what I have stated it as to seditious and anarchical crime. The Hon'ble Mover has suggested that we should make a trial and an experiment. I suggest, Sir, that the present time is not the one in which any experiment can possibly be risked; the situation is too serious, and I would ask the Council to follow me when I state the opinion that the Resolution is not merely premature but is ill-timed."

The Hon'ble Maung Bah Too:—"Sir, I do not wish to discuss the Resolution at length, but I merely rise to say that the people of Burma would not tolerate the higher ranks of the Police in Burma being filled with Indians. When my countrymen are ready for these appointments, and are fit to hold them, they will naturally desire to fill them themselves." 3-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Lieutenant-Colonel S. L. Aplin:—"Sir, the effect of the Hon'ble Member's proposals, as pointed out by the last speaker, the Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven, would obviously be the elimination of the British officers from the higher ranks of the Police and the substitution in their place of Indians, not men whose capacity has been tried, but young men whose only known qualification would be that they possessed sufficient literary aptitude to enable them to pass examinations. I think that this scheme contains all the elements of failure. I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by repeating the arguments against the Resolution that we have just heard, but I should like to say that I am in full sympathy with those arguments. There are, however, two points I should like to emphasize, two reasons which appear to me to have special weight against the acceptance of the Resolution. The first is that the Resolution as it stands is distinctly unfair to the European officers now in the Police. I do not think that anybody who has read the evidence given before the Public Services Commission could possibly question the justice of the conclusion that the Commissioners have arrived at that the pay and prospects of the police should be improved. Whatever steps you may deem necessary as regards future organization there appears to be no reason why the officers now in the Police should be refused what is justly due to them. Secondly, I would call attention to the point raised by my Hon'ble Colleague, Maung Bah Too. I cannot speak, at least from personal experience, of what the effect of the introduction of these proposals would be in India; but as regards my own Province, I have no hesitation in saying that the introduction of these 3-16 P.M.

proposals into Burma would meet with the strongest opposition. The reason is plain. Not for many years to come is it probable that the young Burman will be able to compete successfully in open examination with the young Indian. The result will be that if proposals (3) and (4) are accepted the higher appointments in the Police will be gradually filled by Indians. This would create an undesirable situation, undesirable because it would arouse great dissatisfaction and discontent among the people at large. It is not at all the Burman's theory of self-government that the higher appointments in the public services of his own Province should be filled by Indians."

8-19 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, when I came here I was determined not to speak on this Resolution, but the remarks that have fallen from the Hon'ble Member from Calcutta and from the Hon'ble Member from Burma leave me no alternative. The first point that was urged was that this Resolution is a little premature and ill-timed, and that it is likely to be attended with grave consequences. May I point out that, even if the recommendations of the Hon'ble Pandit were to come into full force, it has been calculated that the higher appointments will not be and cannot be filled by Indians for many years to come, so there is very little danger of European supervision being relaxed. Another point has been urged that the special conditions of Bengal have been so grave that it would be absolutely unwise to introduce any changes at the present time. I quite realise the gravity of the situation, but may I ask whether the police services in Bengal since 1858 have not been recruited and filled exclusively by Europeans in the higher branches, and whether if we have come to that perilous pass very great credit can be taken for the method of recruitment and the high brain-power of that Service. I desire to make no disparaging remarks with regard to the men who have been continuing a campaign somewhat successfully against the dacoities in that unfortunate part of the country; but, Sir, it is a legitimate criticism I am advancing that these men have not been able to foresee and have not had sufficient skill to meet the situation before it became perilously grave. It seems, therefore, that a little stiffening, a little competition between the two elements (European and Indian) might not be devoid of some use in making the Service more efficient than it happens to be at present—if there were a little competition, and the knowledge brought home that the officer would not be supported no matter what happened by those at headquarters—things would vastly improve. But in the circumstances the officer's best talents and powers are not trained or perhaps only trained when it is too late. In this connection may I interpose that in the Native States we have not been able to find any very grave inefficiency in the management of matters or in the detection of crime or the punishment of offenders. It may be said that those who have experience of Native States may take a different view. I am not here for any great comparison on that point, but I should like to say that the whole Service is manned by Indians practically in Native States, and that things have not become so desperately bad as to require that supervision which is said to be essential. So far as Madras is concerned, detection has become poorer and poorer, a revision has taken place, and the invariable answer of Government and of the Officer-in-charge of the Police Department, is that there is a better registration of crime and therefore we should not look to very great percentages in the matter of detection. If it is a question of detection some excuse is found for the poor quality of detection; reasons are equally forthcoming to explain other defects. Nobody would advocate violent changes, but I cannot see why this superior system cannot be understood by Indians with proper physical vigour, with physical efficiency, and with high mental power; why should the Indian not be equal to understanding a few simple rules and their enforcement? If there has been any success in the past with regard to the Indian element, it is stated to be because it is under European supervision, without any adequate grounds. Indians in the Police Service are not the best of their kind, for this reason that there is no scope for the best brains. Men may be honest and may be physically and intellectually vigorous, but still they are not in possession of the qualifications necessary in the higher ranks of the Service, according to these artificial standards. They have absolutely nothing to look forward to except three or four appointments, and those under special conditions. That is not the kind of treatment which is conducive to a very high morale in the subordinate ranks of the Indian Police, and that may be partly accountable also for the low efficiency of the police in this country. I hope, therefore, that Hon'ble Members will not consider that we are now in the best of worlds and rest content with the existing system; there is no grave danger of dislocation if the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution is carried.''

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. Fagan:—" Sir, in considering the Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Member it is scarcely possible to avoid recognising that the specific recommendations which it includes and which seem to invite separate and detailed discussion are in reality aspects of one principle, that they in fact seek to secure the adoption of a policy in regard to the selection of officers for the Indian Police Service which diverges from that which has been in force hitherto. The Indian Police Commission of 1902-03, while providing for the limited, the gradual, the tentative introduction of Indians into the Indian Police Service, laid strong emphasis on the principle that a large proportion of the officers must be European, trained and educated in Europe, and they also remarked that it was essential that there should be distinct methods of recruitment for Indians and Europeans, respectively. The recent Public Services Commission in its majority Report, while recommending the direct appointment of Indians to the Imperial Police Service, and an extension of their promotion from the Provincial Service to the Indian Police Service, expressed a definite opinion that there were grounds of policy for drawing the bulk of its members from Europe under the system at present in force. Specifically, they recommended that the proportion of Indian officers should gradually be increased from 5 to 20 per cent. Such, Sir, broadly speaking, is the position which has existed up to the present, a definite recognition of the principle that the European element in the Police Service must be substantially predominant. On the other hand, the Resolution of the Hon'ble Member seeks to contradict, to abrogate that principle. As I understand it, it aims to throw open the Indian Police Service equally both to Europeans and to Indians. This, then, is the fundamental issue which has to be discussed in connection with this Resolution. I need hardly say that it is an aspect of a much wider question, of a question which covers a far more extensive area than the constitution of the Indian Police Service; the question whether and how far it is essential for the general well-being of India that the British tone, the British atmosphere, and British methods should continue to prevail in its administration and policy. Sir, on that question very much might be said. To discuss it in full would carry me far beyond the comparatively limited scope of the present Resolution. But for the purposes of my argument, I will content myself with one general remark, and that is this, that in no wise differing from, in fact in full agreement with, what I believe to be a general perception which permeates and pervades the vast majority of the population of India, I hold that the maintenance of a British tone, a British atmosphere of British methods is of vital and essential import for the continued well-being, the security, and the peace of India.

3-26 P.M.

"As regards the particular case of the Indian Police Service I can conceive it being argued against me somewhat as follows:—'Basing your opinion as you do on the view which you have just put forward you seem to be oblivious of the fact that your flank has already been effectively turned by the acceptance of the broad principle of the admission of qualified Indians in greater numbers to the more responsible positions in the Public Service.' Sir, may I say without presumption that I cordially share in the acceptance of that principle, that I admit that there is much scope for its progressive application in the light of growing experience. But I would reply that, so far as I am aware, that principle has been accepted subject to the retention of a definitely and substantially predominant British element in those services in which it is desirable and necessary. I urge that in virtue of the essential features of the police force for whose working and efficiency it is primarily and directly responsible, the Indian Police Service is emphatically and obviously one of those services. What, Sir, are those features? In the first place, the Indian Police Force is the direct and immediate agency for carrying out the first, the fundamental, the essential function of a civilized Government, the maintenance of law and order, the detection and prevention of crime. In cases of anything like wide-spread popular disturbance—and I need hardly remind the Council that such cases have not been unknown in the recent history of India—the police force is the first line of public defence. Again, it is a force of a semi or quasi-military nature in which the necessity for discipline, the need for prompt, effective and unified action are permanent and leading features. Last but not least, the Indian Police Force in the execution of its ordinary duties is in constant and close contact with the people in their daily life and pursuits, and is thus in a position, unless under efficient supervision and discipline, to cause the most grievous hardship and annoyance to the population. The Indian Police Service, I assert, thus stands on a peculiar and special footing of its own; and, though there is scope, and very considerable scope, for the wider admission of properly-qualified Indians, I would maintain that it is of the utmost importance to the public interest that a definitely predominant European element should be maintained. I will go further and will assert that there are few, if any, departments of the administration which have benefited, or which still have to benefit so much by the infusion of British ideas as the Police Department. Much has already been done to inculcate in the members of the Police Force the notion that they are the servants of the public and not its masters, but the process is yet far from complete, and hence the imperfection of which Indians so frequently complain and which Government is seeking to eliminate.

"After these remarks it is, perhaps, scarcely necessary for me to dwell at any length on the specific recommendations embodied in the Resolution. As regards the age-limits, and quite apart from any question of the relative proportion between Indians and Europeans, I would urge on the Council the view that, having regard to the nature of the work and the functions of the Indian Police Service, the present age-limits are in every way suitable and desirable. The experience so far gained under the present system is all in favour of that view. For police work keenness and activity are specially necessary characteristics, and it is more likely that they will be secured at the age of 21 than somewhat later. Again, the present age-limits allow time after arrival in India for specialised training in the Police School in drill and in language. I can see no satisfactory positive ground for altering the present limits other than to facilitate matters for Indian competitors; but that ground loses its weight in view of the fact that it is proposed to open a separate path for their entrance in India. And that brings me to the recommendation for the introduction of the system of open competitive examination for Indian recruits. Sir, the cult of that system in recent years seems to have lost something of its youthful vigour. Far be it from me to suggest that the cult is altogether discredited. The trouble rather is that there is a growing body of scepticism, and scepticism which has infected circles of Indian thought and opinion which can in no way be disregarded, scepticism as to whether the system is in reality able to give us all that its devotees claim for it, a scepticism as to whether in this country the capacity to succeed in all open competitive examination is identical with, or equivalent to, the capacity to fill any and every public office in any and every part of India. Personally, I share that scepticism for reasons analogous to those which have been developed in Chapter 6 of the Report of the Public Services Commission. Doubtless, the door of the Indian Police Service should be opened wider to Indians who are shown to be possessed of the necessary qualities of grit and power of command, but I for one do not believe that that result can be satisfactorily secured in India by a system of open competition pure and simple.

"As regards the third recommendation, there is, I think, much to be said in favour of the broad and simple principle that Indian and European recruitment for the Indian Police Service should be kept separate and distinct. But, at the same time, I am in sympathy with the desire to abrogate, under proper conditions, the explicit racial bar which exists at the present time.

"Turning, lastly, to the second recommendation, regarding salaries and pensions, it seems to suggest that the Public Services Commission have, in their proposals, treated the Indian Police Service with some peculiar degree of liberality. But what are the facts? As regards salaries, the net result of their proposals is an annual saving of some Rs. 17,000. In the case of pensions, their proposals practically amount to this, that the general pension scheme which the Commission framed should apply to the Indian Police Service no less than to others. I do not propose to examine that scheme. I will only remark that it may be fairly said that the benefits which it proposes to confer are on a scale which is distinctly and decidedly modest. But, on what grounds of equity and fairness, can it be urged that the Indian Police Service, of all services, should only be excluded from the benefits proposed?"

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I must remind the Hon'ble Member that he is exceeding his time."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. Fagan:—"The work of the Service is yearly increasing in responsibility, and, if men of character and brains are to continue to be obtained, the terms and conditions of the Service must be adequately attractive. Sir, during the past four years the soil of three Continents has been watered with the blood of the flower of the youth of England, and if I mistake not, when the days of peace return, there will be a tendency, among the survivors in its depleted ranks, to feel that the home country and the Colonies have a first call on their energies in the work of social reconstruction, in helping to repair the ravages of war, and it may well be that India will not then be in so strong a position to call to her service the virile power of England as she has been in the past. To some that may seem to be a satisfactory position, but if the maintenance of a predominant British element in Indian administration is indeed a necessity, if that is not yet a worn-out and discredited fetish, then I venture to think that policy as regards remuneration in the Indian Police Service, as in others, will have to proceed in directions more or less diametrically opposed to those recommended by the Hon'ble Mover."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea:—"Sir, it seems to me that the discussion has brought out at least one point of common agreement amongst all classes of speakers who have addressed the Council. That common point of agreement is, that the rule which imposes a racial disqualification and excludes Indians from the competitive test in London should be done away with. I think that is a common ground of agreement, a common platform upon which we stand. 3-45 P.M.

"An Hon'ble Member, speaking from that side of the Council, was good enough to say that if the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution was accepted it would have the effect of eliminating Englishmen altogether from the higher ranks of the Police Service. That is a bit of wild and romantic exaggeration. Even the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan does not go beyond 50 per cent. of the appointments being reserved for Indians. I think, therefore, that we may dismiss that part of the argument which has been adduced. We stand upon this common platform that, so far as the Government of India rule is concerned, the rule excluding Indians from the competitive test, the unanimous sense of this Council is that it should go. That is a point gained.

"Next comes the question whether Indians should fill 10 per cent. of the posts, or 20 per cent. or 50 per cent. In regard to that matter there is a very wide divergence of opinion. It is claimed for the police that it is a highly efficient service. I am compelled to say, Sir, that it is one of the least efficient departments of the State. If I were to give expression to the public opinion of my countrymen I would say that the Post Office is the most efficient and the police is the least efficient department of the State, and, that being so, we the people of India think that it is necessary to re-organise it even on the ground of efficiency. Facts have been supplied and in this debate, which show that the police is not as efficient as it ought to be. My Hon'ble friend (Mr. Kesteven) has referred to the bomb-throwing, the assassinations, the dacoities, the murders, and things of that kind which took place in Calcutta some few months back, and he has used it for the purpose of showing that, but for the European direction, those dacoities and murders would not have been put an end to. But, Sir, we have this fact that in France there were things of that kind not many years back in Paris and elsewhere, and the French police had no difficulty in suppressing them; our police had considerable difficulty in dealing with them. Therefore, instead of that being an argument in favour of police efficiency, I say it is an argument against it. If the police were alert, vigilant, capable, if they knew what was taking place in the corners and by-lanes of our great city, they would have found out the conspiracies that were being hatched and would have prevented the crimes that took place. The object of the police is of a two-fold character, to prevent crime and to detect it. I am compelled to say that they are singularly deficient in both these branches of police work, and they were deficient in the very cases to which my Hon'ble friend referred, and on the ground of which he claimed efficiency for the police. Then my Hon'ble friend observed that it was owing to European direction that these things were successfully dealt with. My friend omitted to notice the bravery, the heroism, the pluck, the self-denial of the Indian police officers who voluntarily threw away their lives in the service ...."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Kesteven :—" I expressly referred to the bravery and courage and devotion of the Indian Police Force. "

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" The Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea may not have heard what the Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven said on that point. "

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—" I am very glad that my Hon'ble friend did bear testimony to that fact. Therefore, these assassinations, dacoities, and so forth bring out the fact that Indian policemen possess, in a conspicuous degree, those qualities which contribute to the efficiency of the police.

" Well, Sir, my point is that the police is not as efficient as it ought to be, and therefore it should be re-organized with a large leven of Indian officers in the higher ranks.

" Another Hon'ble gentleman—I think it was the last speaker—observed that our policemen regard themselves as the servants of the public—not a bit of it—as the masters of the public. The policeman in the street is the lord of creation and thinks that he can do what he likes. I will give you a personal instance of what happened the other day. (At this stage the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan rose.) I am in possession of the house, and I am not going to sit down because you have risen......."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I must remind the Hon'ble Member that he must address his remarks to the Chair and not to any one else."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—" I bow to your ruling, Sir. I will give the Council a personal experience to illustrate my remark that a policeman considers himself to be the master of the public and not their servant. Three or four days ago a friend and I were coming in our carriage to this place. A policeman stops us on the way. He says 'this road is not meant for Indians but for Europeans, and you must go the other way.' I said 'I am determined to go; you can do what you like'. And I did go in spite of his protest. Now this is an instance of personal experience which took place within a hundred yards of the Secretariat. And yet you say in this place that the policemen consider themselves to be the servants of the public. They do nothing of the sort, they consider themselves to be the masters of the public. The whole atmosphere has to be changed, and if you would change the atmosphere it can only be done by the introduction, the large introduction, of qualified Indians.

"My Hon'ble friend there has spoken of the British atmosphere. I admire the British atmosphere; it is the very breath of our lives. Now, Sir, the British atmosphere may exist without the component parts, the units being altogether British. Take the Provincial Judicial Service. It is saturated with the British atmosphere, with the spirit of British honesty, of British justice, of British integrity. Who are the members of the Provincial Judicial Service? Indians, 99 per cent. of them are Indians. It is not upon race, creed, or religion that the high British atmosphere depends. It is upon the qualities of the men that compose a particular Service that the atmosphere of that Service depends, and if we have men of the right sort, though they may be men of brown colour, though they may not be Europeans, the British atmosphere will be maintained. Therefore, I do think that the time has come for a re-organisation of the police for the purpose of efficiency, and, in order to make it more efficient, in order to make the police feel that they are the servants of the public and not the masters of the public, I think it is necessary that the Indian element should be largely introduced into the police force. We are talking of responsible government. To whom are the police who go about the streets responsible? Responsible they may be to their superiors, not to the people in any sense, not to those who pay them. Therefore, in the interests of the efficiency of the police, apart from other considerations, it is of the utmost importance that we should re-organise the force, and the least that we can do is to accept the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya."

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh:—"Mr. Vice-President, strengthened by the experience I have of the Police Services, I beg to support the Resolution just moved by my Hon'ble friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. The recommendation made in it will not only redress, in a great measure, a standing grievance of the Indians, but will also make the Police Services more efficient, more popular, and more suited to the requirements of the country. It is undesirable that the age-limit, at present fixed for the admission in examination of candidates for Police Services, is a little too low, and precludes us from getting police officers of that mature judgment which might be expected from them, and which they are called upon to exercise in the discharge of duties that devolve upon them. It is owing to age-limit that we get officers too young and too prone to fall victims to their own ill-framed ideas or in the hands of low-paid Indian officers. The urgent need in the administration of this country is to cheapen its administrative machinery compatible with efficiency, but I am afraid the recommendation of the Public Services Commission for enhancing the pensions and salaries of officers in the Police Services is altogether in the other direction. I am sorry I am not prepared to admit the advisability of this recommendation either from the point of view of efficiency or of expediency.

3-51 P.M.

"The rule debarring the Indians from participating in the examination for the recruitment of such Services is not only humiliating to the self-respect of the Indian people, but is also rendering the Police Services less efficient than they ought to be. In my opinion, as far as these Services are concerned, it is a weak argument to say that as the police have to maintain order and peace, it is necessary to keep British officers at the head in the districts. I very strongly hold, and I assure the Council that it is not from any racial motives that if efficiency and reform of these Services are desirable, the first step should be to provide greater facilities to Indians of prescribed merit to occupy higher posts in these Services. It is needless for me to urge any detailed arguments in support of this view. The grievances of the people against the police would be greatly minimised, and in the detection and prevention of crime there will be a greater co-operation between the people and the police. I hope the Government would be pleased to see their way to accept the recommendation contained in the Resolution, and to take early steps to adopt measures to recruit Indians of merit and respectability for higher posts of these Services in greater numbers."

3-56 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir James Walker :—" Sir, in the discussion to which we have been listening on this Resolution, I venture to think there has been a tendency rather to discuss the ultimate result of the Resolution than its definite and immediate object. Its definite object is to secure the Indianization of the Service through the avenue of open competitive examination. No doubt, the Public Services Commission apprehended it to be necessary to provide certain safeguards to retain a preponderance of the English element. But, Sir, it seems to me that if any Member of this Council thinks the best way of filling the Police Service is simply to try and get the cheapest suitable article, regardless of its country of origin—as I have, indeed, heard it recommended for obtaining Finance Ministers—that conclusion does not necessarily mean that the best value for his money is the candidate who offers the largest number of marks at an open competitive examination. I would venture to impress upon Hon'ble Members that, however much they may sympathise with the object of the Hon'ble Pandit in moving this Resolution, they cannot support it unless they are ready to endorse open competition as the right means of selecting candidates for the police.

" Sir, the other day I had great pleasure in supporting a Resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's, intended to afford facilities to Indians to enter the Indian Civil Service through the open door of competition along with their English compeers. I am not so much of a sceptic as my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan is in regard to open competitive examination as a means of selection. I am in favour of it wherever it is feasible; but in the case of the police a joint examination is not feasible. There is such an enormous difference between the class of candidates who compete for this Service in the two countries. Well, Sir, as regards an examination in India, in the present condition of Indian education, I should despair of getting thereby the right stamp of men. My conclusion is the result of over 31 years' service—the better part of a year of which was actually spent as an Inspector-General of Police. But no doubt it will be said that that is bureaucratic experience. Well, Sir, what I would ask the Council just for a moment to note is the attitude taken up by certain members of the Commission. There is Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, whose sympathy with Indian aspirations is known to everybody. He accepts the majority's recommendation without any minute of dissent; but he makes one remark, which, I think, is very pertinent to the whole question, in his general minute: 'It is, however, far more important for an increasing employment of Indians in the Services that their recruits should be good than that they should, for the moment, be numerous.' Then Sir Mahadeo Chaubal distinctly says that he wishes to see the competitive system extended as far as possible, but all that he does is slightly to raise the age so as to make it, as he says, 'just possible' for some more young Indians to get in through the English gate. In particular, I would ask the Council to consider the case of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim. Now, that Member was not hampered by any ideal of securing unanimity with his colleagues in giving a full and free expression to his opinions. Now Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim is sceptical of the need for the precautions, recommended by his colleagues in order to safeguard the British element, and definitely recommends competitive examination in the case of half of the Provincial Service. But what does he do in the case of the Police Service? He recommends that 75 per cent. of the Assistant Superintendents should pass in by the examination in London; and, although he takes off the racial bar, he still retains the age at 19—21. He cannot, therefore, have contemplated a very large number of Indians being successful. For the remaining 25 per cent. he does not recommend competition at all, but selection by Selection Committees. I would remind the Council that he distinctly tells us that his main recommendations were discussed with, and had the concurrence of, Mr. Gokhale.

"The Hon'ble Pandit admits that this selection of superior police officers by open competition which he suggests will be an experiment, but he does not propose it on any experimental scale. If his second best alternative is accepted, namely, that at least one-half of the total number of posts should be recruited by an open competitive examination held in India, that will leave only the other half for both English appointments and for promotions from the Provincial Service combined. If his first alternative of a simultaneous examination were accepted, Englishmen would undoubtedly be swamped out by the Indian element. Just compare the educational standard of the Indian candidate for direct appointment to the post of Assistant Superintendent with that of the English boys appearing for the Police Examination. As the Commission says—

'For this service suitable Europeans can be got for salaries as low in relation to the general run of European salaries, as the salaries required to get a suitable native of India are high in relation to the general run of Indian salaries.'

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma said that even if the Hon'ble Pandit's recommendations were accepted, the higher appointments would not be filled by Indians for many years to come. But he forgets that the conditions of the Service are such that within five years quite a lot of the candidates would be acting temporarily as Superintendent, and in eight years the bulk of them would be permanently acting as such, so that the effect would be felt very soon It is for Hon'ble Members to consider whether, when constitutional changes in the direction of responsible self-government are in contemplation, the Police Service is a very suitable Service for such a radical experiment as the Hon'ble Pandit proposes. It is to that Service after all that any Government look for the maintenance of internal security. I will not detain the Council any longer except to remind non-official Members that in nailing their colours to the mast of selection by open competitive examination they are, perhaps, rushing in with the Hon'ble Pandit where Mr. Abdur Rahim and others would fear to tread. I beg to oppose the Resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir Hamilton Grant:—"Sir, I am concerned with this Resolution in so far as it touches the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan, which come mainly under the control of the Foreign and Political Department. Under present arrangements the police officers serving in the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan belong to the Punjab cadre, and are seconded from that cadre for service in those Provinces; and therefore any sweeping change which affects the Punjab Police must ipso facto affect the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan.

4-4 P. M.

"It may be urged that special arrangements might be made for the appointment of police officers for these two turbulent Provinces. The matter has been fully considered, and it has been found quite impossible to constitute a separate cadre for these Provinces owing to the paucity of appointments. I need not go into this matter, but I can assure this Council that this expedient is impossible. Therefore, the present arrangement must remain, and, if the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution were to come into force, we should find inevitably among the North-West Frontier police officers before long Indian officers. I have no desire, Sir, to draw any comparison between the comparative competence of Indians and Englishmen for appointments in general; but I have no hesitation whatever in saying that for police service on the North-West Frontier Province and in Baluchistan in the higher police appointments, involving as they do many quasi-political duties, the average Indian is not competent, and it is essential to have European British officers. I do not want to harp on this comparatively small issue in the case, but I think that it should be borne in mind by the Council that, whatever arrangements may be made, will affect these two Provinces, the peace and order of which are of first class importance to India, not only important in themselves, but as inevitably reacting upon the adjoining tribal area. With regard to Mr. Bannerjea's remarks I would say one thing, and one thing only. He has complained bitterly that the police in India are not the servants of the public but the masters. I think that, so far as their province is concerned, that is exactly what the police should be; they should be masters and not servants; we do not want our police officers or our policemen to be salaaming to a recalcitrant public and doing everything they are told as obedient servants should. We want them within the limitations and trammels that attend on all good masters to perform their work as masters and to nominate the public within their own province.

"There is one other thing that I should like to say before I sit down, and this I say in all seriousness. I should like to sound a note of warning, to make an appeal, an appeal which I should like to have made yesterday when the Hon'ble Pandit brought forward his Resolution about the enhancement of passenger rates. I should ask this Council, are we acting wisely in the interests of our own reputation when at a time like the present, a time when every day is full of fate, we indulge in an orgy of Resolutions on domestic matters of a far from emergent nature? I should like to ask them how the reports of this action of ours will read at Home and abroad. I should like to ask them whether it does not, to a great extent, misrepresent the real temper of this Council. I believe that there is not a Member here present who is not as greatly anxious as I am to see this war victoriously ended and to devote his efforts to this end. But if in the daily reports of our proceedings the public at Home and the public abroad read that we have been bickering and wrangling either over matters of petty discomfort like the enhancement of railway rates or matters of commonplace domestic interest like the Resolution now under discussion, they can only conclude one thing, and that is, that we are not taking this war seriously, and I will appeal to the Council as one who has lived many years in India, and who loves India, and who is jealous of the good name of India, to bethink them whether they are wise in indulging in this spate of domestic discussion at a time like the present, and whether they would not be wise to postpone these nebulous Resolutions to a later date when they can be discussed without the grave pre-occupations that now surround this Government, and thereby prove themselves a true daughter of the great mother of Parliaments at Westminster."

4-10 P. M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"I think, Sir, that there is a considerable amount of misapprehension about the scope and meaning of the Resolution which has been moved by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. Some of the Hon'ble Members who have preceded me this afternoon seemed to have an apprehension that one sure and certain consequence of the acceptance of the Resolution by this Council would be that Indians would swamp the Europeans in the Police Service, and that very probably the Police Service will be depleted of Europeans. Now, I do not have any such apprehensions in the matter. If the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution is accepted this afternoon, I should think it would take at least 15 to 20 years' time before the number of Indians in the higher grades of the Police Service would be equal to that of the Europeans; and that would be at the speediest rate. So that at least for the next 15 or 20 years neither Europeans in Calcutta need apprehend any serious menace to their safety, nor need people in Baluchistan apprehend any catastrophe in the immediate future. I think arguments of this character are really beside the mark. They are in the nature of special pleading, arguments which you would expect from monopolists. Well, as regards Burma, it has been said that the Burman feeling is very strong against Indians occupying higher positions there. I can appreciate that feeling. Well, if Burma does not want Indians, it should not be difficult for Government to make a special provision for Burma, and no one would be more happy than myself if more Burmans could get into the higher grades of the Service in that Province. I have no doubt that the time will soon arrive when Burmans will be clamouring, as we have been clamouring, for the admission of their own countrymen into the higher ranks of the Service in their country. Now, Sir, the Public Services Commission must have been aware, indeed the report itself shows, that they were amply aware of the provisions of the Statute of 1833. Sir Mahadeo Chaubal refers to that Statute in his Minute on the subject. Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim also refers to it, and even the majority of the Commission referred to it. I believe, speaking for myself, that the provision in regard to the admission of Indians in the higher grades of the Police Service was made with a view apparently to remove the doubts which had arisen with regard to the practice which had been followed during the last 20 or 25 years. It had been urged that the rule which required that the candidates who appeared at the police examination should be of European descent was in direct violation of the provisions of the Statute of 1833. To get over that difficulty, probably the Public Services Commission thought it necessary to say 'All right, in future Indians, too, will be eligible for the higher grades of the Police Service, provided they received five years' education in one of the schools in England.' Now, I should like the Council to realise the significance of this. It really means, as was pointed out by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, that we should send our boys away at the age of 13½ or 14 on the offchance that after five years' study they might manage to pass the examination. Now, Sir, I put it to you how many Indians are there in this country who can afford to send their sons at the age of 14 to take that risk? I should like to know how many Englishmen would like to send their boys to any foreign country to qualify for any particular career at that age?

"I think, Sir, if it were intended to exclude Indians it would be much more fair, much more straightforward and more courageous to say 'No, for reasons of policy we do not want Indians to come into the Service and we do not fight shy of that conclusion.' Therefore, Sir, I say that the departure made by the Public Services Commission is of absolutely no value to us I read some time ago some articles on the report of the Commission in a leading Anglo-Indian newspaper, which described that report as a 'small-souled document.' It was not until I read the Chapter on Police Services, that I realised the full significance of the remark. Now, Sir, a great deal has been said to-day about the continuance of British character and of British traditions. Well, I am an admirer of British character and of British traditions, but I do not think it is a part of British character or of British traditions to exclude others from a fair share of their dues. I should be very sorry if that was a part of the British character or of British tradition. I venture to say that if Mr. Justice Shambunath Pandit had not been appointed a Judge in or about 1864, similar arguments might have been urged to-day against the appointment of Indian Judges to High Courts. It was once said by a former Law Member that Indians were subtle lawyers. It was not difficult to imagine that, if the question of appoining them as High Court Judges arose now, it might be urged that though they were subtle lawyers they were not men of practical common-sense, they could not take a broad view of things, and therefore it was risky to appoint Indians. If Indians had not entered the Indian Civil Service, if Mr. Satyendra Nath Tagore had not first of all entered the Indian Civil Service, and if Indians now sought to enter the portals of that Service, inconvenient questions might have arisen. Perhaps it would be said that they had not got British character and British traditions, and, although they had lived in an atmosphere of British character and of British traditions for 100 years, they had not yet imbibed either. Arguments such as these may be very good to convince those who have the monopoly of these posts: they may be weighty in the eyes of the bureaucracy, but let me tell you, the less you talk in this fashion and refer to such arguments the better for the reputation of bureaucracy. Let us be frank and open about this matter. If you have decided that for reasons of State, at any rate in the Police Services, or the Military Services, it is not desirable to admit Indians into higher ranks say so plainly, but do not use arguments that only provoke and do not convince us. I submit that, so far as our claim on grounds of law and justice is concerned, it is indisputable. It is for the Government to say whether that claim will be admitted on grounds of expediency also. I for my part do not wish to enter into grounds of expediency. I take my stand on the higher ground of justice and natural right. With regard to the other part of the Resolution which relates to the increase of salaries of the Indian Police it is enough for me to say that the United Provinces Government in the memorandum which they submitted to the Public Services Commission, and which is printed in the Volume containing the evidence, did not think that any case for increase of salary had been made out, I speak subject to correction. Sir, I for one say that, unless Indians are placed on a footing of absolute equality with Europeans, and until that is so in principle and practice, I will offer opposition to the last day of my life to any proposal which gives Englishmen an advantage and places my countrymen under a ban. If there is really any need for an increase in salary in the Services, it is in the lower ranks of the Police and not in the higher. But, so long as you keep my countrymen under a ban, it will be my duty to oppose such a proposal. In the end I would only say that if there is any real objection to the present proposal, why not suggest another means of appointing Indians to the higher ranks of the Services? The Public Services Commission are willing that 20 per cent. Indians should ultimately be appointed, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya suggests 50 per cent. In other words, it comes to this that the Public Services Commission are prepared to allow one-fifth, Mr Malaviya wants one-half. I think it should not be difficult for Government to devise some means by which Indian aspirations in regard to this matter could be satisfied, even if the door of competition was condemned Sir, I strongly support the Resolution moved by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya."

4-21 P. M. The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:— "The Resolution as framed by my friend the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, jumbling together a number of recommendations within a single Resolution, is calculated to place Hon'ble Members who may be in perfect sympathy with some of the recommendations, but may not be prepared to support others, in a difficult position. In the remarks that I propose to make in connection with this Resolution, I intend to confine myself to the third of the recommendations, with which I am in complete sympathy. No one entertains more genuine admiration than myself for the high qualities displayed by the European Police Officer in maintaining law and order, in the detection and prevention of crime. I fully and frankly recognise that his continued presence in the higher ranks of our Police Services is in the highest degree desirable. But that is one aspect of the question. There is the other aspect of the question: is it desirable, is it equitable that Indians, properly qualified Indians, should be absolutely excluded from competing for these higher appointments in the examinations held in England? I for one cannot conceive any ground of policy or expediency warranting the continued existence of this state of things. Hon'ble Members are aware that the appointments in the Indian Civil Service have long been open to properly qualified Indians; that the Indian Medical Service is also open to properly qualified Indians, and that recently commissioned ranks in the Indian Army have been thrown open by His Majesty, the King-Emperor, to Indians. Lastly, the Public Services Commission has recommended the promotion of selected Police Officers from the subordinate Police Services to a certain number of posts in the higher Police Service. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, there is absolutely no justification whatever for the exclusion of Indians, properly-qualified Indians, from competing in the open competitive examinations in England. In so far as this recommendation is embodied in clause 3 of the Resolution, I am in entire accord with my friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, and I give the proposal my cordial support."

4-2 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:— "Sir, the position of Government in regard to the subject of this Resolution is much the same as it was during the last Session. We have not the opinions of Local Governments before us, and no decision on the recommendations of the Commission has been arrived at.

[18TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Vincent.]

"For this reason, although I do not doubt that the discussion of the Resolution will be useful, it will be obvious to the Council that the Government cannot accept it. I will take the opportunity, however, if I may, of examining these proposals and putting before Council what are my provisional opinions on them. I do this because I was reproached during the last Session for not committing myself sufficiently to definite opinions on some of the Resolutions which came before Council, and to make it clear that I took this course not because I do not hold opinions of my own on them, but merely because I felt myself in a somewhat difficult position, having regard to my office as Home Member.

"Well I will take up the recommendations in this Resolution seriatim. I will discuss the age question first. I should like to point out that the age now fixed was decided after prolonged consideration of the recommendations of the Indian Police Commission of 1902-03. That body recommended a slightly lower age, I think it was 18 to 20, but for various reasons into which I do not wish to enter now, the Government finally decided on the age now prescribed. Then I draw attention to the fact that none of the members of the recent Public Services Commission have suggested any change in this matter, except Sir Mahadeo Chaubal, and I cannot but feel that he only did so in view of the recommendation of the Commission that it should be obligatory on all candidates to have had five years' previous education in England before the examination.

"On the merits I put it to the Council that the Government do not necessarily need for the Police Service men with university qualifications. What they seek to obtain is younger men with a good public school education, of active habits, physically fit, of an age suitable for training mentally and physically, and prepared to undergo the hardships which such training necessarily entails. I submit, further, that there is no analogy at all between the Police Service and the Indian Civil Service in this respect, and I think that a more correct comparison might be made with the Army. I believe that in the Army it has been found that the best age for admission is approximately the school-leaving age, and the same remarks apply with particular force to the Police Service in this country, as it is really in a great measure a quasi-military force. We know that the present system has produced, a suitable class of recruits, and there is therefore no necessity, and indeed no reason, to change it. Further, if the limits were raised as proposed, I fear myself that many of the advantages which we now secure might be lost Police officers would be older when they entered the service, less amenable to discipline, and less receptive in the matter of education and training, and they would certainly be less fit and active at the end of their service. Again, it is for the Council to consider whether we should not, if we sought to secure suitable recruits at a later age, have to pay them considerably more than we do at present, when you can get younger men at cheaper rates. These are considerations that appear to me of importance in considering this question of age.

"Now I turn to the question of pay and pensions I can only say that the Government have not arrived at any decision on the point, and it would be, most unwise for me to express any definite opinion here. The Government have, of course, no wish to pay more than is necessary, and I think sometimes that the very jealous manner with which proposals for increase of expenditure are regarded in the Finance Department is not sufficiently realised by non-official Members of this Council. The Public Services Commission have themselves recommended very slight increases, if any. They say, 'Salaries are now drawn under the graded system. We recommend, as elsewhere, that the incremental method of payment should be substituted, but as regards the rates we cannot accede to the request which was made to us for a further all-round increase.' They go on to say that the financial effect of their scheme would be a saving of Rs. 17,000 a year. There is, however, another aspect of this matter which the Government cannot neglect, and the facts here will have to be faced as in other services if the intention is to continue to recruit Europeans of suitable character. If we want such men a reasonable wage must be paid. We know that there are complaints that the present wage is insufficient, and that the conditions of the service are not satisfactory, and I hope the Council will realise the fact that a poorly-paid Police may be the worst form of economy. It is, indeed, essential that not only in the lower grades, but also in the higher ranks officers should have a pay on which they can live decently and which will place them always beyond any possibility of temptation I understood the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru to say that Sir James Meston's Government did not propose to the Public Services Commission any increase of pay to the higher ranks of the Police. Well, I am not aware of what Sir James Meston's opinions were then because . . ."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"You will find that in the Volume containing evidence."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I do not doubt the accuracy of the statement, for I have not had time to read all the volumes of evidence, but here is an opinion which he expressed recently on the subject. Speaking to a Parade of police officers on 7th January 1918 he said:—

'I know the growing burden of work and responsibility upon you (the Police) and the great rise in the cost of living has hit you perhaps harder than any other class in the public service. It has, therefore, been my clear duty, on receiving your recent memorials on the subject, to say to the Government of India what I am saying to you now and to support, as strongly as I was able, your prayer for special consideration at their hands.'

"That, Sir, is what Sir James Meston recently said on this point. Speaking from my own knowledge and from information which I have received from many police officers, I can honestly say that the position of many married officers in this service, especially those who have families to educate, is really serious and that there is good reason to think that in some cases financial anxieties have affected the efficiency of the officers concerned. Many officers are unable to take leave even when such leave is necessary in the interests of the State, and when illness is added, their financial position is one of great difficulty.

"It was suggested by one Hon'ble Member that there had been a tendency to neglect the interests of the lower ranks for the benefit of the higher ranks. I should like to assure the Council that there is no foundation for this supposition. I will cite a few figures. I find that in 1906 the cost of the Imperial Police Service was 13·5 per cent. of the total police expenditure, whereas in 1916 it was only 7·9 per cent. Again, I have checked the figures in 1912-13 to see what the actual additions in expenditure were in the different grades. I find that the increase in police expenditure as a result of the Police Commission's recommendations up to 1912-13, that is ten years after the Commission reported, was 15 lakhs on the Imperial Service, 70 lakhs in the case of Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors, and over 70 lakhs in the case of constables and head constables. I told the Council a few days ago of the amounts which we were spending this year to improve the conditions of the lower services in various Provinces I find again that the increase in expenditure on the Imperial Police Service in any year up to and including 1916, as compared with 1912, has been less than 4½ per cent., whereas in other branches of the service it has varied from as much as 37 per cent. in one year to 13 per cent. and 9 per cent. in others. Indeed, I may say with confidence that the conditions of the service of the lower ranks of the Police have been the constant care of Government in recent years, and that they have been materially improved. I do not say we have done all that we should like to have done, but we have done all that was possible. I hope I have said enough to indicate that there are a number of very difficult questions which will have to be considered before Government can say that they will not award any increase or any improvement in the prospects of the Imperial Police Service, and I trust that the Council will realise that the decision of this question is not really so easy as it appears.

"The third point in the Resolution is the question of abrogating that rule which requires every candidate for the superior Police Service to be of European parentage. The Commission has recommended the cancellation of this requirement, and though the Government of India have arrived at no decision on the point as far as I am aware, at least no definite decision, I must confess to being much impressed by the arguments that have been put forward by the Hon'ble Mover and by others in this Council, and it is my earnest hope that this requirement will be cancelled.

"I also see great weight in the criticisms as to the requirement of five years' previous education in England. I value as highly as any one the qualities which are developed by education in Great Britain, and the character which is the result of such education, but I doubt whether it would be possible to send Indian boys at the age of 14 to Europe unless their parents were resident there, and I do fear that lads of that age might be exposed to great temptations if they were sent there without proper guardianship.

"I now come to the more difficult question of simultaneous examinations, and I desire to consider this question simply on the merits without any reference to historical or theoretical arguments. So far as intellectual qualifications are concerned, I quite admit that we might possibly, or even probably, secure by a system of simultaneous examinations for the police service a class of men educationally superior to the present recruit in so far as intellectual capacity is tested by examination, a subject on which I have some doubt, but I do believe that in the police as in certain other Services, once a particular standard of education is obtained, what is wanted more than intellectual ability is character, power of decision, and other qualities which are in fact mponderable and the possession of which cannot be tested by any examination. I am aware that the existence of such qualities has been the subject of sarcastic remark—sarcastic perhaps is too severe a word, I will say of remark and criticism—in this Council, but character is a very real essential in spite of all that has been said. I admit that at present we do not obtain men of the first rank for the service from the educational point of view, and that the competition is not very severe. I believe also that competition in England will be less keen than ever after the war, when there will be many openings for young men and when the present wastage of the younger generation is felt more fully. On the other hand, in India, the position is very different, and I feel that the service would, particularly if the age-limit were raised, attract a large number of candidates of university qualifications. I cannot feel at all sure, however, that these candidates would necessarily possess the qualities required in efficient police officers. I do not for one moment suggest that these qualities are not to be found in Indians, but what I do suggest is, that they will not necessarily be secured by a competitive examination, and that an examination is indeed no test for ascertaining whether a candidate is possessed of these qualities or not. For the police service, as I have said, the qualities primarily required are power to lead and command, quick decision, courage, readiness to accept responsibility, endurance, physical and moral, and absolute impartiality. These are qualifications which cannot be tested by any form of examination that I know of.

"Further, in spite of what has been said by Dr. Sapru, I believe that the result of accepting this recommendation would be the speedy exclusion of the British element from the police service altogether, and if the Council does not seek to bring this about, then, I think, they ought to hesitate before they accept this recommendation of the Hon'ble Mover. If, on the other hand, it is the intention to arrive at this result, then I must express my emphatic dissent from the proposal. The police service is one of the security services of the country. On it the welfare and peace of this country directly depend. It is the agency which is responsible for the maintenance of law and order, without which there can be no prosperity. I do not suggest that law and order is the sole criterion of good government, but I do say that no Government is a good Government that fails in this respect, and no one can deny that the British Government has adequately performed this duty. I sometimes think that the benefits which the Government have conferred on this land in this respect are in these days overlooked, and that the disorder into which this country was plunged before the era of the British, when might was right and the whole country was a prey to wandering gangs of marauders, is forgotten. I say further that in this work of securing the peace and in the maintenance of law and order, the police have played a very great part, and I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan that on this department a responsibility falls which is different from the responsibility which falls on any other department, and that from the superior officers of this Service qualities are demanded of a character different from that of any other Service, including my own. I would say also that there is no Service in which a relaxation of morale and efficiency sooner shows actual and even disastrous results. Setting aside again normal preventive work, if disturbances or rises occur, our first line of defence is, as has already been said, the police, and my own belief is that, so long as the British Army is responsible for the protection of India from external aggression and internal disturbance, so long will it be necessary to retain in the superior ranks of the police force a substantial British element.

"I may say also that the necessity for such an element has been recognised by every Commission which has taken evidence on the subject, and indeed by every member of every Commission. The observations of Mr. Justice Rahim and those of Mr. Mahadeo Chaubal have already been set out to this Council. It was the same in the case of the Police Commission of 1902. I quote a few words from the Minute of Dissent by the Maharaja of Durbhanga. 'We require Englishmen as well as Indians in the higher ranks of the police in the interests of good administration. I can only hope that the number of Deputy Superintendents appointed each year should not for the present be less than one-third of the number of Assistant Superintendents selected in India, and that the number will gradually be increased to one-half, if the experiment proves a success.' The Public Services Commission of 1886, in speaking of the value of European officers in this Service, said :—

'The absence of European officers was one of the causes, if not the main cause, of the abuses with which the police prior to the organisation of 1860 was universally charged, and although the present condition of the force is still far from all that could be desired, yet it is on the whole greatly superior to that which preceded it, and no step can be recommended in the direction of a return to the former state of things.'

"Now I mention these authorities to support the view that it was the introduction of British officers into this force that has contributed largely to its improvement in recent years. I do not for one moment say that this improvement is due solely to that cause. I know very well that there are many Indian officers whose work is above reproach. But I do say that a great deal of the credit is due to the British officers. I might quote observations to show that this improvement has recently been recognised by many weighty authorities Sir Narayan Chandavarkar spoke of it recently. I have also with me a quotation from Lord Carmichael which shows how highly he appreciated this very body of police to whom my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea has referred......"

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—"Not these men."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"There is also an appreciation by Sir James Meston which recently attracted some attention. I am glad myself also in this connection to bear my own testimony to the admirable and successful work of the Indian police service, and I include in that not only the superior ranks, but I include also those Indian ranks to whom my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea has specifically referred, who have never, or seldom if ever, failed us in loyalty and devotion to duty. But I do maintain that a new morale and new methods have been introduced into the work of this Department by the British officers since the Police Commission's recommendations were accepted, and I contend that the progress has been attained without any loss of efficiency as regards checking crime, and that this has been effected largely by the European officers in the force and by the changes recommended by the Police Commission. I also urge that it would be a real disaster and a danger to India to do anything at this moment of all which might interfere with or impede further progress in that direction.

"Now this is one of my main objections to any system of simultaneous examination, namely, that it will make it impossible to maintain an adequate or even fixed proportion of European officers in the service. I hope that I will not be attacked as wanting in frankness by my Hon'ble friend Dr. Sapru; I have tried to make my meaning clear. I also believe that it would displace the class of recruits we now obtain by men of whose real capacity for police work we should have no guarantee whatever. Indeed, I think that the suggestion of the Hon'ble Pandit that the candidates for the police service should not be chosen in order of merit was to some degree an admission that a system of open competition was not entirely suitable for selecting the officers of this service.

"As to the alternative proposal of the Hon'ble Member, I can only say that the Government have arrived at no decision at present on this point, save the general decision to which I have frequently referred, namely, that they are anxious to enlist Indians, as freely as possible, into the various services. I admit quite frankly that this question must be considered from a new standpoint, that our progress in the direction of admitting Indians into this particular service has been very slow, and that we must be prepared to increase the pace even if this involves some loss of efficiency. I believe myself that the proper solution of this difficulty would be to increase the number of Deputy Superintendents who are promoted to the posts of Superintendents, so far as this is possible, with due regard to vested interests, and to recruit young Indians of suitable character, physique, temperament and education for a reasonable proportion of the posts of Assistant Superintendents. This will, I hope, give effect to the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's recommendation of 'stiffening' the European force by a proportion of Indians. Such a system would, in my opinion, enable the Government to get men of the stamp required for the police service. It would also make it possible to ensure that all communities and all Provinces were adequately represented in this important department of Government. The exact number of Indians who are to be admitted must vary in my judgment in the different Provinces, and progress in this service cannot for various reasons be as rapid as in others. In these circumstances, I am not prepared to admit, and cannot of course commit the Government to admitting, that an all-round rate of 50 per cent. is a percentage which we could accept. But I hope that the Council will believe me,—because it is really the intention of Government and we are honestly and definitely pursuing that policy,—when I say that this matter is engaging our present and earnest consideration, and that we have every desire to treat Indians fairly in this matter and to increase the number of Indians not only in this, but in all the services of Government, and here I pause to assure my Hon'ble friend Dr. Sapru that there is no question of banning them from any service. The number that can be admitted into any particular service must depend on the requirements of Government and the interests of the State. So far as is possible we are adding to the number of Indians in the service, but I cannot by any means guarantee, certainly not at present, that the percentage in the police service will be the figure or anything approaching the figure which the Hon'ble Member suggests."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri:—"Sir, I plead guilty to having made the remark about other than literary qualifications which elicited some disapproval from the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent. I am not less disposed than he is to attach importance to character, to the power to command, to the readiness to take responsibility and to maintain a high level of efficiency. I am at one with him in thinking that these qualities are not brought out by any system that human wit has yet devised of competitive examinations. My Hon'ble friend must explain to me how, when he objects to recruitment by competitive examination in India, he has not raised any objection to such a system of recruitment in England. I did not hear him say anything by way of disapproval of the system prevalent to-day—and in this very police service—of raising the English recruits by a system of competitive examinations. Does my Hon'ble friend maintain that in England, by some subtle process, the examiners are able to discover from the answer papers of candidates the qualities, mental and moral, of the candidates who have produced those papers? Over and over again in England the complaint has been made that the competitive examination is an imperfect test, if it is a test at all, of character. That is a phenomenon not peculiar to India. Competitive examinations in the one Continent and in the other lie under that fatal curse. If the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent had brought forward a solution for overcoming this difficulty in the case of the competitive examination in England, he would be perfectly justified in raising the objection to competitive examinations in India; but in so far as he has not ventured on that task—and for the very good reason that it is an impossible task—I must discount his objection to competitive examinations in India. But, Sir, the real point in the case of the Indian Police Service requires still to be brought out, and I propose within the few minutes that I shall yet have to lay bare what appears to me to be the crux of this whole question.

[Mr. Sastri.] [13TH MARCH, 1918.]

"It has been said that the British character and the British tone must be maintained in the Police more than in any other Service—more than even in the Civil Service. Well, I have learned to appreciate the British character. I know its strong points. I know also what qualities precisely are in the minds of Hon'ble Members when they speak of the British tone and the British character and the British standard of efficiency. I value them highly. But I wish expressly to ask whether it is the belief of exponents of this doctrine here that every single Englishman in the British Isles is a vehicle of this higher British spirit and this higher British character. Are they all swans that live in the islands of Great Britain and Ireland? Do competitive examinations bring all the top men out, the best men out, the most honourable men out? Sir, if it is necessary to maintain the British character in the Service, I venture to tell my Hon'ble friends on the opposite benches that they should take every care to bring into competition with Indian talent the best European talent. In the case of the Police Service they have a specially low standard of examination to catch the somewhat second-class candidate in England. You have the age of 19 as the entrance age for this examination. That is almost the school-leaving age. When you take people at that age and make them sit for a simple examination, with simple papers in Arithmetic, simple papers in English composition, you have certainly not devised the means for drawing out the best exponents of the British spirit, the best exponents of the British character. You run the very grave risk of catching more blanks than prizes in such a lottery, for an examination at that age is notoriously a lottery. And, Sir, I venture to go further and say that those run a serious risk of maintaining this competition at the one end and at the other of unequally yoked fellows, so long as they go on to say that in India we want the best Indians for the Police, but from England we are not so very particular about getting the very best.

"Now I proceed a little further. What are the actual facts? It is impossible, Sir, for the officials who speak for Government to-day, and for us on this side, to agree as to the facts. Indeed, I suppose this Council wishes to hear the truth spoken on every occasion, wishes to know really what is thougth in the most responsible Indian circles. On every question that we here consider, I venture to think that Hon'ble Members on the opposite benches will not feel it a disadvantage, will not certainly feel it as an affront to their feelings, if we state to them the exact way in which we feel on the subject under consideration. Now, with regard to the Police, the views that we hold are very divergent—in fact, I do not know if on the question of any other Service the views that we hold are so divergent as in the case of the Police; and therefore it is, however unpleasant it may be, that I have taken upon myself to state frankly what is thought among certain sections of Indian opinion competent to advise Government on this matter. Now, Sir, as much as Hon'ble Members on the other side we see the phenomena which we seek to appraise. We see the daily work of European and Indian officers. Now, if it is claimed that the work of the Police is a mixture of good and evil—and I do not suppose there is any one who says it is absolutely good —if the work of the Police be a mixture of good and evil, it is not right that credit should be claimed for the good while discredit is disclaimed for the evil. Both alike should rest on both wings of the Police force, European and Indian. We may differ as to the precise amount of good which may be ascribed to the European force and the precise amount of evil which may be ascribed to the Indian force—and there it is that, I am afraid, we disagree somewhat radically. Our opinion, Sir, distinctly is that if the Police is efficient to-day it is, in a very considerable measure, due to the personnel of the Indian element. I do not say nothing is due to the European, for the European force superintends and supervises; but I do say that the primary, the most difficult, the most dangerous part of the work is shared by the Indian with the European in honourable measure. Our contention is that if you want to improve the European force, as it certainly needs to be improved, you cannot do it better than by introducing a much larger Indian element into the personnel. I understand the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent, speaking for Government, is not against . . . ."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" Sir, I said quite clearly, if I may interrupt for one minute, that in stating the views I put forward I was expressing my personal opinion only. I thought I had made that clear to Council. If I failed to do so I have been guilty of a serious omission."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri :—" I take the correction The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent speaking for himself ventured to express the opinion cautiously that he would recommend an increase of the Indian element in the Police Force. Speaking for Government he was not able to give any such assurance; in fact, Government had come to no conclusion on the subject at all. Well, I am perfectly certain that when Government comes to examine the matter they will be prepared, with confidence, to increase the Indian element Well, it is to the precise proportion that objection is raised. The introduction of the competitive examination, simultaneous examination, in India and England is viewed with suspicion, first, because it may not produce the desired class of recruit in India, secondly, because it may render it difficult to maintain the desirable minimum proportion of Europeans in the force. Well, if that is the ground upon which simultaneous examinations are opposed, what ground can there be for rejecting the last alternative which the Pandit has brought forward that one-half should be raised in India by a competitive examination to fill the higher ranks ? As the Government have come to no conclusion upon this subject, it is not for me to assume that Government will reject it in the end. I will therefore found no argument on the supposition that that will be the case. But it is desirable that Government should know what is felt by us. Having stated it once, let me state it again to the Council, that we fear there is great need of introducing the best Indian talent into the Police Force, and if Hon'ble Members are anxious, as they apparently are, that the European section of the force should compete on favourable terms with this Indian element and maintain the British spirit and the British honour and the British character of which they are so justifiably jealous, let me tell them that they must contrive some means of bringing the best European talent into the force, as the present system is by no means suited to that end."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Sir, in replying to the criticisms that have been offered on my Resolution, I will first refer to the appeal made by Sir Hamilton Grant that a Resolution like this and the one I took up yesterday should not be introduced in this Session. I am as conscious as my Hon'ble friend that every day is full of fate; but I gave notice of this Resolution long ago, and I took it that the Government did not see any reason to ask that these Resolutions should not be taken up; and when Government did not suggest that there was any reason to run away from discussion of such subjects, we should not be held to blame if we do our appointed duty in the right time. The questions that have been raised may be very unimportant in the eyes of my Hon'ble friend. It may be very unimportant in his eyes for instance that in these days of hardship we are taking away a crore of rupees from the pockets of third-class passengers; it may be a matter of little importance to him; it did not appear so to me, nor is the question whether in the future, when the Government of India come to consider the report of the Public Services Commission, they should look at the Indian point of view in the right way a matter of indifference to us.

"Now, Sir, Mr. Kesteven spoke of the Resolution as one having for its object the elimination of the European or British officers from the Service; so also did the Hon'ble Colonel Aplin. I am sorry that the Hon'ble the Home Member also endorsed that view and has spoken of the Resolution as one the object of which was to eliminate the European British officers from the Service . . . ."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"I did not say 'object'; I said 'result.'"

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya :—"I thank my friend for the correction. Now, Sir, I must say that I am greatly surprised that these Hon'ble Members should give expression to such sweeping remarks as that. Mr. Kesteven spoke of this Resolution as intending a sweeping and drastic change. I was not prepared to hear from any Hon'ble Member of this Council that with the wording of the Resolution before him he would think that the result of the Resolution could be the sweeping change that these Hon'ble Members have suggested. What do we ask for? We ask that the age-limit should be raised in some respects; we ask that the pensions and salaries of officers of the Indian Police Service should not be enhanced; that the rule which requires that candidates for the Service should be of pure European descent should be abrogated without qualification, and that the examination should be held simultaneously in India and in England. If the last recommendation should not be accepted I suggest as an alternative that 50 per cent. of the appointments should be reserved for competition in India Does that look like a sweeping change, having or likely to have the result of sweeping the British officer out of the Indian Police Service? I am sorry to note, Sir, that some of my Hon'ble friends showed a somewhat nervous attitude in dealing with this question. The Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven—and I am surprised all the more that a lawyer of his eminence should express such an opinion—spoke of the concern which the European population in Calcutta would feel if the Resolution were given effect to Now, Sir, I did not imagine that he of all persons would think that the Resolution was going to bring about an entire substitution of Indian policemen in the Service during the next fifty years; and I thought he would also remember that the European residents of Calcutta owe the peace and security which prevails in Calcutta along with their Indian brethren somewhat to the action of the Indian policeman. And I thought that while the claim that we should not forget what we owe to the police was made he would remember also that the Indian policeman had a share of the credit which he wished us to give to the police. He also . . . . ."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven :—"I thought I said, Sir, in my speech that I claimed a share for the Indian police also."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"Most certainly you did."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya :—"My friend, Sir, said that we were all apt to forget how much we owe to the police; he spoke of the suppression of sedition and anarchical crime, and of work done by the police, and he referred also to the work done by the Indian members of the police force. I only wanted to emphasise the fact that Indian members of the police force in Bengal had put in a record which was as splendid as that of any police force in the world could be; many of them have laid down their lives in the discharge of their duty, duty done unfalteringly, duty done in the clear consciousness that their lives were at stake, that they were being followed and hunted by men whom they were trying to arrest; and in these circumstances not one, not two, but a number of Indians have discharged their duty.

" Now, Sir, I think if nothing else the work of the Criminal Investigation Department would establish the fact that Indians do possess that courage, power of command and that power of endurance, and all those other qualities to which the Hon'ble the Home Member so eloquently referred. But it would seem, Sir, that even this record is not sufficient to establish the claim of Indians to be regarded as fit for employment in the higher ranks of the Police administration in their own country. The Hon'ble Member from Burma spoke in the same strain, and he thought there was great danger of evil arising to the country if the Resolution were accepted, and he wound up by saying that at any rate in Burma there was no desire that the change should be introduced. If Burma does not desire the change, nobody would force it on the Province, but when the general question is raised it is not the view of Burma that has to be considered. The Hon'ble Mr. Fagan laid great stress upon the recommendations of the Commission of 1902. I submit, after the recommendations of this Commission, to say that it urged that British character and tone should be maintained is to argue in a vicious circle. We have heard the argument long, long enough, it has been repeated many times. That is the point at issue between my friends who take that view and ourselves. What is this British character, what is the British tone to which reference is made? I submit that it means nothing more or less than the possession of a good education and the possession of that character which is to be found in the average Englishman, as also in the average Indian, and in average people in other parts of the world Character is the result of education and of social surroundings, and I submit that when my friends lay too much stress upon it, they invite the criticism that not very long ago, the Police Commission in England reported very unfavourably about the police in England. The Hon'ble the Home Member has referred to the recommend ations of the last Police Commission. It should not be forgotten that until the reforms to which he refers were carried out the policemen in this country did not possess anything like the character which they now possess. I submit that if the men who are appointed to the Service were wanting in education, if they did not possess the character required, they would not be able to render the account of themselves that they have rendered. Experience has shown this, so do not claim it as a monopoly of Englishmen the character—the qualities that they possess. They may have them, and there is the fullest acknowledgment of the fact, but for goodness sake, for the sake of justice that you love, do not deny the character which you claim to possess to your Indian fellow-subjects who possess it in a similar measure, until they have been put to the test and given an opportunity to display their character. It is a matter for sincere grief that in this discussion Indian officers are said to be lacking in certain qualities which are essential to certain Services. If Indians are given an opportunity of showing whether they possess those qualities they will develop them. Now, Sir, there is no desire on my part to belittle the work of the police, but I fear that some Hon'ble Members have claimed too much for them, and particularly the Hon'ble the Home Member when he reminded us of the disorder which was found in this country when the British took possession of it. It seemed to me that he forgot, or evidently overlooked, the earlier reports of Police Commissions appointed by the Government and also their scathing remarks. Measure after measure was introduced to raise the character of the police in the higher ranks Let, therefore, no claims be put forward for any particular section unless it is justified. We know from the reports of the last two Police Commissions that only recently there was great dissatisfaction felt with the personnel of the Police. We know that the systems of recruitment which had been adopted were condemned one after another. For instance, the Commission of 1886 wrote 'the system naturally supplies youths who have failed to succeed in examinations held in England and who come to India in the hope of securing a nomination to the Police by influence brought to bear on the nominating authority,' while some of the officers selected had turned out to be excellent, others on the contrary have taken years to become fairly efficient, and in some extreme cases have never become efficient at all. The system was abandoned and replaced in 1894 by a competitive examination. Charges were made against the officers appointed under the recommendations of the Commission of 1886. The Police Commission of 1902 said that 'the charges made against them are that they are often not well educated nor intelligent men, that their training is defective; that their knowledge of the vernacular is not such as to enable them to have free intercourse with the people; that they are too much in the hands of their subordinates; that their views are too narrow and their sense of responsibility too weak to allow them to pay due regard to complaints against their subordinates or to take due notice of misconduct. The Commission are of opinion that there is a great deal of truth in these complaints.' Now, Sir, I will not quote further the opinion of the Commission. I say you owe the purity and efficiency of the Police to the conditions under which you recruit the Service, and not merely to the fact that they are English lads taken from English schools. I know the English lad has many good qualities, I admire him, but I claim that the Indian lad too in his small way would be found to possess similar qualities. The Hon'ble the Home Member has told us that the Government is considering the matter, and that the opinions he has expressed to-day are his personal opinion. Even though he has made that clear it is still necessary that I should offer a few remarks on the opinions he has expressed . . . . ."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"May I remind the Hon'ble Member that he has one minute left."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Sir, I will save the Council that minute."

5-22 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I should like first of all to reply to the criticisms of the Hon'ble Pandit on my remarks as to the benefits of British rule in this country. I understood him to maintain that the Police have had no part in this work of improvement . . . ."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"I never said that. The Hon'ble Member claimed a larger part than was justified by the facts."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"'A larger part than the facts justify.' I do not think I have done anything of the kind. I maintain that the Police have played a great part in the pacification of this country, and I contend that the defects of which there were complaints in the earlier days have been largely remedied by the introduction of European officers in 1861. I would point out that the figures and facts which he has quoted from the Police Commission's Report of 1902 do not refer to the present condition of affairs at all, but relate to a state of things which the Commission was appointed to remedy and which it did effectually remedy. What the last Commission of 1915 said was 'it has not been shown that the reforms have broken down; the evidence shows that they have been on the whole successful, but that hardly sufficient time has elapsed thoroughly to test their effectiveness.' I submit that, in these circumstances, it is hardly fair to quote the system which prevailed before 1902 to illustrate the arguments which the Hon'ble Member used. The Hon'ble Member, in another part of his speech, said that he repudiated the suggestion that Englishmen would be excluded entirely from the Service by his Resolution. I rather feel with the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru when he said that there should be more frankness in such matters. What is the object of raising the age-limit, of having simultaneous examinations? What would be the effect of these proposals? Does not every Member of this Council know, Sir, that the effect would be to exclude all

[18TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Vincent; Pandit M. M. Malaviya; Mr. S. N. Bannerjea; Mr. Sastri.]

British candidates from any chance of success? I ask, I put it frankly, would not that have been the effect? It is useless to say 'I never suggested that British candidates should be excluded, that was not in my mind at all. I intended something entirely different'. The Hon'ble Member used soft words, but his intention was exactly what I say......"

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"The words of the Resolution are there".

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Yes, the words of the Resolution are there, and they are for the Council to read. They recommend simultaneous examination and the raising of the age, and I do maintain that accepting this Resolution would have the effect which I have stated. When the Hon'ble Member says he does not mean this a Hindustani proverb comes to my mind which it would be impolite to repeat at this moment.

"He then went on to say 'what is this British character of which we hear so much?' Well I can tell the Council readily what this British character is. I have been frequently taunted in this Council with not explaining what I mean by the term, but if evidence of this effect is wanted I would say Si monumentum requiris, circumspice. Consider the state of this country now as compared with a hundred years ago. There is the real evidence of the value of British character and British administration, of how and why these results were attained. I will quote a passage from one who is greatly revered by many politicians, and by many others in India. I will read to the Council what Mrs. Annie Besant says of the value of British officials in India. I do not quote the lady as an authority on whom I place great value, but I have always understood that she is a person whose opinion is accepted with respect and even with reverence by many Members of this Council......"

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea:—"What is the date"?

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"The date is 1911, I believe, but I am not sure. This is what the lady said:—

'They forget that the vast population of India, especially the villagers, constantly show preference to the English official over the Indian because the ordinary Englishman is more considerate of the poor, more ready to work to relieve distress than is the ordinary Indian. In the relief of famine the chief difficulties arise from the lower class Indian employes, not the educated Indians who work most nobly relieve suffering. The complaints of torture by the police are accusations against Indians. In the administration of justice, the Englishman judges fairly as between an Indian and Indian where the Indian is swamped by influences of kindred caste-prejudices and local customs; all this is known to and remembered by educated Indians and I am only repeating above what I have heard them say over and over again as to the substantial value of British rule.'

"Now these are not my words. Those are the words of this lady, and I simply ask the Council to consider them. Then the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri challenged me, saying you hold a competitive examination in England, but why won't you have it in India. Well, it is difficult to answer that question without saying what might wound feelings in this Council, and I am unwilling to do anything of that kind. But what I take to be the advantages of a competitive examination in England are these. Taking a number of candidates......"

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri:—"I do not draw the Hon'ble Member into making a statement which he would rather not make. He may rather not make it merely to please me. Let me not be understood to draw from him a statement."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I was only anxious to make it clear that I could answer the Hon'ble Member, but in the circumstances I refrain from saying more.

"The only other point I have noted here is a remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri as to the value of the work of Europeans in the Indian police. I understood him to suggest that the value of their work has been over-estimated, that the good work was really that of the Indian police, and that the candidates for the police were selected after an examination at an early age when the selection was little more than a lottery. I have tried to get the words down as accurately as I could. Well, I doubt whether it can be said that selection by examination at the age of 19 is in any sense a lottery, and I would ask the Council to remember that this is the age at which, I believe, candidates for scholarships for University are generally chosen, and it is the age which the recent Commission, which included at least one eminent educationist, deliberately selected as the suitable age for entering the Indian Civil Service. Now as to the value of the work of European officers in the police service, I can only ask the Council to weigh the testimony of every authority and of every Commission which has inquired into this matter and which has taken evidence on the subject. Their testimony is unanimous that the work done by the European officers in the higher ranks of the police has been of incalculable benefit I do not wish in any degree to depreciate the work done by Indians. That is far from my purpose. I am well aware of the excellent work that they have done. It has been my good fortune to serve in many districts with them, but I do not think that it would be fair to say that the work in the higher ranks of the police done by Europeans is not largely responsible for the present improvement in that service. I regret, Sir, on behalf of Government for the reasons I have given I must oppose this Resolution."

The motion and the alternative motion were put and negatived.

The Council then adjourned to Thursday, the 14th March, 1918.

RESOLUTION.

PAPERS REGARDING LABOUR EMIGRATION TO THE MORE DISTANT CROWN COLONIES.

Delhi, the 23rd March 1918.

The following papers regarding labour emigration to the more distant Crown Colonies are published for the information of those interested in the subject :—

Extract from despatch from the Government of India to His Majesty's Secretary of State for India, No. 5 (Emigration), dated Delhi, the 23rd March 1917.

We have considered in Council your Despatch No. 24, dated the 11th February 1916, in which you expressed yourself entirely prepared to accept the policy advocated by the Government of India, namely, the abolition of the indentured system of emigration, and said that you would invite the Colonial Office to co-operate with you in devising the most suitable means for giving effect to it with due consideration of the interests of the Colonies affected and with adequate safeguards for the protection and well-being of the emigrants under any new system which might take the place of indentured labour. As you are aware, Lord Hardinge announced your decision by accepting in the Indian Legislative Council, on the 20th March 1916, the motion of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya that "early steps be taken for the abolition of the system of Indian indentured labour" Lord Hardinge was, however, careful to say that you had asked him to make it clear that the existing system of recruiting must be maintained until new conditions, under which labour should be permitted to proceed to the Colonies, had been worked out in conjunction with the Colonial Office and the Crown Colonies concerned. Towards the end of his speech Lord Hardinge expressed his deep gratitude to yourself and to His Majesty's Government, and added—

> "Their attitude in the matter fills me with assurance that what has been promised will be fulfilled to the letter, and that the end of the system which has been, relatively speaking, of so small an advantage to this country is now in sight. No one who knows anything of Indian sentiment can remain ignorant of the deep and genuine disgust to which the continuance of the indentured system has given rise. Educated Indians look on it, they tell us, as a badge of helotry. This is soon to be removed for ever."

Lord Hardinge's announcement satisfied those who heard him, for all believed that the period of waiting would not be long, and the Hon'ble Pandit in his reply said "the country will understand that a little time must elapse before the system can be entirely obliterated."

2. No suggestion was made in the Legislative Council that the period of waiting might extend up to five years, and we feel assured that no one who heard Lord Hardinge's announcement believed that there was a possibility that the ending of indentured labour might be deferred for so long a period. It came, therefore, as a considerable shock to popular expectation to find that a suggestion had been made by Mr. Bonar Law in the Colonial Office letter of the 21st February 1916, that a period—say five years—should be fixed after which no further recruiting under indenture should be allowed. In accordance with your instructions the Colonial Office letter of the 21st February has never been published by us in India, but knowledge of the suggestion made by the Colonial Office has filtered through from one or more of the Colonies concerned. The possibility that Lord Hardinge's promise might remain unfulfilled for a period of five years has roused deep-seated indignation throughout India and the Colonial Office letter has been a useful weapon in the hands of the speakers at public meetings.

3. The telegrams which have passed between us have informed you that there has been during recent months a persistent agitation throughout India for the immediate abolition of recruiting for indentured labour. Mass meetings have been held in all the great centres of population, and not only have the audiences been large, but they have included many, both Indians and Europeans, who are recognised as the leaders of thought in this country, but who are not usually willing to take part in public meetings.

4. The attacks made at all these meetings against the system of indentured labour may be briefly summed up in the charge that the system is one which is based at the outset on fraudulent statements made by the recruiter, and that the direct result of the system is the slavery of the men and the prostitution of the women. In charges made in general terms like these there is likely to be a good deal of exaggeration, but after making allowance for all possible inaccuracy and exaggeration, we find ourselves unable to deny that there is a substratum of truth in each one of the three charges which we have just mentioned. This is not a position which we can afford to allow to continue.

5. We have taken advantage of the present session of the Indian Legislative Council to invite representative Indians to formulate a scheme of assisted emigration to take the place of the present system of indentured emigration, and we laid before them copies of our letter of the 1st July 1916 to Local Governments and of the replies of the several Local Governments thereto. Some Members of the Legislative Council met and discussed this question among themselves for several days, but were unable to devise any scheme which in their eyes would be satisfactory. Eventually they handed us a memorandum (a copy of which is enclosed) signed by sixteen Members of the Council in which they state that in their opinion no alternative system is practicable which will carry with it a guarantee of the moral well-being of the Indian labourers concerned.

6. We feel the force of the arguments contained in the memorandum, and we are convinced that no solution short of that stated in the memorandum would satisfy Indian opinion on the subject, and that in the present state of heated feeling in the country the objections raised to the indentured labour system would be urged with equal vehemence against any other system recognised by the State under which labour was assisted or encouraged to emigrate to the four Crown Colonies.

7. Within the past few days it has been necessary for us for military reasons to impose a prohibition on the emigration of all unskilled labour. This is of course a temporary measure only, but it appears to us unthinkable that the system of indenture should be revived after the military necessities have passed away, and we earnestly ask for your support to secure the final ending of the system against which such grave accusations have been made. We consider also that in the circumstances it will not be possible for us to suggest the introduction of any scheme of assised emigration until the feelings of exacerbation to which the indentured system has given rise have died down. An interval must, in our opinion, in any event elapse between the abolition of the old system and the institution of any new one.

8. If these recommendations are accepted, it will be uncertain when a scheme of assisted emigration will be required. In view, however, of the arrangements which have been made for the holding of a Conference on the subject in the course of next May, it may be useful to set out the conditions which, in our opinion, must find a place in any scheme of assisted emigration, if such a scheme should be needed in the future.

9. The first essential in any new system must be that the emigrant should understand the invitation which the Colonies hold out to him. He must be told not only the daily wage which he is to receive, and the hours for which he is expected to labour for that wage, but he must also be informed of possible deductions from that wage and the cost of provisions and of clothing. The terms of repatriation must also be clearly made known to him. It is plain justice that these material facts should be disclosed under any future system, and if they had been disclosed in the past, there can be little doubt that only those who had some strong reason for wishing to leave their country would have offered their services as indentured labourers. As Lord Hardinge said in his speech before the Legislative Council on the 20th March 1916,

> "why should the labourer have to journey thousands of miles over the 'black water' to settle in a strange country and to place himself for a long period under conditions often of an undesirable, and in some cases of a revolting, nature in order to achieve the desired end, when he can obtain in India the choice of either better paid labour, as for instance, in the big jute areas of Eastern Bengal, or almost equally well paid labour with the prospects of obtaining in a very few years a home and a piece of land on the Assam tea gardens? It seems rather absurd to find a man going to Fiji for a wage of 26*s.* a month with rice at 2¼ seers to the rupee, when he can readily earn 6*s.* or 7*s.* a week during the jute season in Eastern Bengal with rice selling at a third of the price prevailing in Fiji, with the additional advantage that he can, if he likes, with far greater ease, take his family with him to add to his earnings than in the case of distant Colonies. It is clear then that the cooly himself does not stand to gain much by emigration."

Our belief is that if the facts are made known Indian labour will not be found to be willing to leave this country except for a wage considerably in excess of the wage which can be earned here.

10. We now come to the question of the safeguards which should be required in the case of labour proceeding under any new system to the four tropical Colonies in question. We have examined the subject in correspondence with Local Governments and Administrations, and as stated above with reference to the views of the various representatives of Indian public opinion. We have also with your approval deputed Mr. Marjoribanks and the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. Marakyar to examine the conditions of labour in Ceylon and the Malay States with a view to considering whether a system of recruitment similar to that adopted for Ceylon and the Malay States might be adopted with advantage for the four Crown Colonies. These gentlemen have produced a valuable report, a copy of which we have now the honour to forward to you together with copies of the correspondence with Local Governments and of the other papers bearing on the subject.

11. In addressing Local Governments we expressed the view that any future system must conform to the following general principles :—

(a) a proper sex proportion must be maintained among adult emigrants;

(b) the labourer must have reasonable freedom to choose and change his employer;

(c) the conditions under which the labourer works and lives in the Colony must be suitable and proper; and

(d) recruitment in India must be carried on under due supervision and must be free from abuses.

It will be convenient to examine the subject with reference to the above principles, and in doing so to elaborate the manner in which these principles should, in our view, be applied.

12. As regards (a), we have already referred to the moral evils which undoubtedly exist and to the charge that is made that the present system leads directly to a life of prostitution for the single women emigrating to the Colonies which take indentured labour. The maintenance of a proper sex proportion has been one of the greatest difficulties under the present system and the low proportion of women hitherto recruited is, in our opinion, responsible for many of the worst evils connected with the condition of indentured labourers in the Colonies. The evils are, however, probably as much due to the class of women who form a proportion of the female emigrants as to the disparity in the numbers of the sexes. The sex question, in our opinion, cannot be solved by merely insisting on a larger proportion of women. Merely to raise the minimum proportion of women would probably have no other effect than to increase the number of undesirable women recruited. After careful consideration we are convinced that the only course which would be in any way satisfactory, would be to encourage recruitment by families To effect this, it would be necessary to make a rule that no woman should be recruited unless accompanied by her family. We might also find it necessary to cause registering officers to make enquiries in the village of origin to check alleged family relationships. We do not think it would be necessary to prevent single men from emigrating alone; but agree with the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces (Sir Benjamin Robertson) that the number of such single men recruited should not exceed one to every five adults.

13. (b) The labourer's freedom of choice.—The aspect of the present system which, next to the position of women, excites the strongest popular resentment is the feeling that the status of the indentured labourer has been in the past virtually one of bondage, and that so far as the future is concerned, however much his condition may be mitigated by beneficent regulations and considerate treatment, the Indian labourer transported to the Colonies is not likely to be a really free agent. We share this feeling. The position of an ignorant peasant transported thousands of miles from his home, and serving an employer who has, at best, an imperfect acquaintance with his language and customs, is, we conceive, in danger of being one not far removed from bondage.

14. The inherent difficulty of this part of the problem lies in the distance of the Colonies from India and the consequent cost of recruitment. We recognise that the Colonies will reasonably expect some security for the cost of the passage money which they have paid, presumably, for the benefit of the emigrant. At the same time, the labourer should have the right ultimately to obtain repatriation. It is even more necessary that he should not be bound down to serve any particular employer for longer than a very short period. He should, we consider, be free to leave his employer on a month's notice, and this freedom should be guaranteed by entitling him to invoke the assistance of the Protector of Immigrants, if necessary, to ensure his transfer. We further regard it as essential that it should not be possible to proceed against labourers for failure to fulfil their contracts otherwise than by a civil suit. We recognise that the Colonies have already abolished imprisonment as a substantive penalty for labour offences, but it is no less important that punishment by fine and imprisonment in default of payment of fine should be similarly abolished for such offences. In short, Indian labourers should not be subject to any legal liabilities or obligations which do not apply equally to the rest of the population of the Colony, and which do not form part of the ordinary law of master and servant in England.

15. It is, we consider, a matter of importance that no employer should be able to claim that he had paid the expenses of recruitment of any particular labourer, and this, it appears to us, could easily be obviated by the payment of the expenses by the Government out of a common fund raised by a rateable cess collected from the employers. No part of these expenses should be charged against the labourer, who should start his career in the Colony free from any initial burden of debt. We see no necessity for any long-term contract between the labourer and the Government. The only contract which the labourer would enter into would be a short-term contract of service with his employer for the time being, whom, as we have just explained, he should be entitled to leave on a month's notice. With regard to the question of repatriation, we would suggest that the labourer with his family, if he has a family, should be entitled to a free passage to India after three years of approved service or a bonus in lieu of the passage-money if he should elect to remain in the Colony. A labourer wishing to return to India before the completion of three years' service should, we suggest, be entitled to one-third of the passage-money for himself and his family after one year of approved service and to two-thirds after two years.

16. (c) Conditions of life in the Colonies.—The assisted emigrant ought, we urge, from the date of his arrival in the Colony to have the same rights, including those of acquiring land, as any other free man arriving in the Colony. So far as the general conditions of life in the Colonies are concerned reforms are desirable in many directions. The recommendations of Messrs. McNeill and Chimmanlal in their report, including improvements in housing, medical assistance, hospitals, education, legal recognition of Indian marriages contracted in the Colonies, and other matters have, we are told, met with general acceptance in the Colonies, and are, we understand, largely in course of adoption.

17. (d) Conditions under which labourers are recruited in India.—We had originally been disposed to think that a system of recruitment similar to that adopted for Ceylon or the Federated Malay States might meet the case. In order to ascertain whether such a system would be suitable, as already stated, we deputed Mr. Marjoribanks and the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. Marakayar to examine the conditions of labour in Ceylon and in the Federated Malay States. We have, however, after examining the report come to the conclusion that recruiting for distant Colonies cannot be worked on the lines of the 'sardari' or 'kangani' systems or on that of the Federated Malay States. If any system of assisted emigration is to come into being, recruiting must, we think, be on generally similar lines to the present, but with substantial modifications in detail, and with a better class of recruiter working under officers of the Colonial Civil Service. The present class of recruiters should be replaced by men of good character, and as far as possible by men who have actually worked in the Colonies and can speak of the conditions from their own experience. All recruiters should be specially licensed, and should be on fixed pay and not paid by results. It is obviously necessary that the emigrant should start his career in the Colony not only free from debt in respect of his passage money, but also free from debt to the recruiter. The number of recruiters should, in our opinion, be kept as low as possible, and recruiting should be confined to the congested districts of India and should not be permitted at all in the industrial and pilgrim centres. There should, we think, be a real attempt to organise recruitment from villages; and selected non-officials, preferably chosen from among the honorary magistrates, should be entitled to inspect depôts. The physical and age tests should not, we think, be strictly applied to every member of the family, otherwise recruitment by families would in many cases break down, for the labourer would naturally be unwilling to leave behind those members of his family who had least ability to help themselves.

18. A reference is necessary in this connection to the arrangements governing emigration to Surinam and the French Colonies. We understand from the Memorandum of the British Legation at The Hague, dated the 1st May 1916, regarding emigration to Surinam, which formed an annexure to your despatch No. 140, dated the 8th September 1916, that the required notice of termination of the Convention of 1870 with the Dutch Government has been duly given, and that it remains merely to acquaint them with the details of the new arrangements as soon as these are settled.

Though indentured emigration to the French Colonies has been in abeyance and is not likely to be resumed, it appears to be desirable to take the present opportunity to determine the Convention of 1861 with the French Government.

19. We have, with your approval, invited Sir James Meston to represent the Government of India in the proposed Conference. We are also deputing Mr. N. E. Marjoribanks, I.C.S. and Colonel W. M. Kennedy, Chairman of the Assam Labour Board, who will be able to assist with information with regard to any matters of details which may arise.

Despatch from His Majesty's Secretary of State for India to the Government of India No. 93 (Public), dated London, the 10th August 1917, and enclosure.

With reference to the letter of Your Excellency's Government in the Commerce and Industry Department, No. 5 (Emigration), dated the 23rd March last, I hope to be in a position in the near future to address you on the question of labour emigration to the British West Indies and Fiji. It was, as Your Excellency is aware, unfortunately impossible for Sir James Meston and Sir S. Sinha to remain long enough in England to take part in the actual inter-departmental conference, but my predecessor had the benefit of their assistance in an informal discussion of the general question with the Secretary of State for the Colonies and officials of the Colonial Office, and I share the satisfaction felt by him at their presence on this occasion.

2. The decision of His Majesty's Government that indentured emigration should not be re-opened, has already been communicated to your Excellency.

3. I now desire to invite the careful attention of Your Excellency's Government to the enclosed communication * from the Colonial Office. It was probably inevitable that other aspects of the position of Indians in the Colonies in question should absorb public interest in India, but it is evident that little attention has hitherto been paid in unofficial circles to the facts set out by the Colonial Office with regard to the free Indian population.

* Dated 7th June 1917.

4. One result of Indian labour emigration has been the establishment overseas of free Indian communities which have attained a high degree of prosperity. This fact does not, of course, affect the necessity for removing the system of indenture and substituting in its place an entirely new system of free emigration from India to the Colonies. It is, however, important to realise to what degree, even under the admittedly condemned system of indenture, those Colonies have successfully established thriving and self-respecting Indian communities of settlers whose welfare is now bound up with the general prosperity of those Colonies, and many of whom have been enabled to rise to the position of landholders, merchants, and, in some cases, professional men. The continuance of the main local industries is a matter of vital concern to Indians hardly less than to European colonists. To recognise the present position and needs of these Indian communities does not imply satisfaction with the indentured system now abolished.

5. It is further to be observed that the Crown Colonies which imported Indian labourers under indenture have never opposed any obstacle to the entrance of free Indian immigrants of the mercantile or other classes The peculiar history of the Indian question in Natal under responsible government has possibly given rise to some misunderstanding on this point. But, as you are aware, Natal was alike the only self-governing Colony that imported indentured labour from India, and the only labour-importing Colony that restricted the entry of free Indian immigrants. In that case the supply of further Indian labour was eventually refused by the Government of India. But the British West Indies and Fiji have always maintained an open door for the entry of all British Indian subjects who desired either to travel or to settle down. I am not sure how far it is understood by public opinion in India that the prevention of the free emigration of Indian labourers to those Crown Colonies which imported indentured labour until the present year would not affect or concern any portion of the Empire which has imposed immigration restrictions upon Indians ; and I see some inconsistency in an attitude that seems to combine protest against any restrictions on the entry of Indians into other parts of the Empire with opposition to the free emigration of Indian labourers to those Crown Colonies which desire to establish assisted immigration and to give the labourers full facilities for ultimate settlement on the land. The object of the inter-departmental conference is to devise a scheme under which Crown Colonies that desire to foster Indian immigration of this character may be able to arrange facilities for the emigration from India of persons belonging to the agricultural classes who may be willing to migrate as free labourers with the prospect of eventually establishing themselves on grants of land. It is an essential feature of any such scheme that it shall not reproduce under another name the old indenture system, and that future emigrants shall be enabled to find a career in their new homes without passing through the status which, in the case of their predecessors, is regarded as having inflicted a national stigma upon India.

6. In view of the misunderstandings which have blended with perfectly sincere and reasonable indignation at actual abuses connected with the indentured system, it seems very desirable that the above considerations together with such facts as are now presented in the statements furnished by the Colonial Office should not be lost sight of or their importance overlooked. Your Excellency's Government will no doubt take such action as may be possible to this end. I need hardly remark that they furnish strong reasons against the imposition of unnecessary barriers to the movement of unindentured labour under salutary conditions to Crown Colonies in which free and prosperous Indian communities are already established.

ENCLOSURE.

Colonial Office to India Office.

No. 26104.

Downing Street,
7th June 1917.

I am directed by Mr Secretary Long to state that in the course of his recent informal conference with Mr. Secretary Chamberlain, Sir James Meston, and Sir Satyendra Sinha on the subject of Indian emigration to the West Indies and Fiji, he was led to believe that some misapprehensions exist in India as to the status of the Indian communities in the four Colonies. He desires, therefore, to invite the assistance of the Secretary of State for India in removing any false impressions which the people of India may entertain as to the position of their countrymen in the four Colonies concerned—British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji.

2. The conditions of employment of future emigrants are now a matter of discussion between representatives of India and of this Department, and Mr. Long does not think it would serve any useful purpose to enter in the present letter into any detailed discussion of the existing system or of that by which he hopes it will be replaced. But to remove all possible misunderstanding on a point of principle, he desires to state definitely that it is recognised both in the Colonies and at the Colonial Office that the indenture system must be abolished forthwith, and one more consonant with modern conditions substituted for it, before recruiting for the Colonies is resumed. He has only to add that, after consultation with representatives of the planting interests, and with their full concurrence, he had already decided before the recent meeting took place to propose on behalf of the Colonies the immediate abolition of the indenture system.

3. Mr. Chamberlain is already aware that the penalty of imprisonment for labour offences has been abolished in the four Colonies.

4. Recent controversy has concentrated attention on the position of the indentured labourer. This was probably in the circumstances inevitable. It is nevertheless unfortunate that as a consequence the existence of large and prosperous Indian communities in the Colonies as a direct result of the immigration system has been overlooked; and Mr. Long thinks that much of the feeling which has been aroused in India would have been avoided had not the distance of the Colonies and the lack of frequent direct communication prevented the people of India from having more accurate knowledge of the facts with regard to their fellow-countrymen who have settled in the Colonies.

5. The prosperity of these communities is bound up with that of the Colonies in which they have made their homes. If the industries of the Colonies suffer, the Indian communities will be the first to feel the effect. It is therefore desirable that their existence should not be overlooked by their countrymen at home when discussing a question so vital to the Colonies as that of the supply of labour which is essential to Colonial Industries.

6. Indians actually under indenture in the four Colonies form but a small proportion of the total Indian population there. How small the proportion is will be seen from the following figures:—

	British Guiana.	Trinidad.	Jamaica.	Fiji.
Total Indian population (1911 Census) . .	136,528	121,896	20,063	56,853
Under indenture (1915-16)	7,197	8,327	2,913	14,362

The proportion is, of course, larger in Fiji, as Indian immigration into that Colony began over 40 years later than into British Guiana. In the two Colonies which are mainly dependent on Indian labour the proportion of Indians under indenture is about 1 in 19 and 1 in 15, respectively.

7. Even of the labourers actually working on estates only a portion is serving under indenture. According to the latest figures available for Trinidad the number of adult immigrants not under indenture working on estates which also employ indentured labour was 15,676. The corresponding figure in British Guiana was 38,411. It will be seen that, leaving out of consideration estates which do not employ any indentured labour, by far the greater number on the Indian labourers employed on estates where the indenture system is in force are free from the restraints of that system.

8. Indian emigrants to the four Colonies have been recruited from the labouring classes in India, and have settled in Colonies engaged in producing a few staple kinds of estate produce, mainly sugar, fruit and cocoa. It would, therefore, be natural to expect that the Indian population in those Colonies would consist almost entirely of estate labourers. This, however, is not the case. It is probably not realised to what an extent the movement of population from India has been one of settlement of small proprietors on the land. In this connection the following quotations from the reports of the Protectors of Immigrants for 1915-16 are interesting :—

Trinidad.

"General Condition of East Indians not under Indenture.—The general condition of these people continues to be excellent. There are, to-day, many East Indians of independent means; some occupying positions of trust and honour in the Government service, and a few in the professions, law and medicine.

"Many are well-to-do merchants, while others still retain their affection for the soil, being either cane farmers or landed proprietors.

"The following table shows the amount of lands owned by East Indian proprietors and the nature of the cultivation.

"Acreage under Cultivation.	Nature of Cultivation.
56,414	Cocoa.
9,488	Rice.
9,868	Sugar cane.
9,698	Provisions.
3,081	Corn, etc.
1,740	Cocoanut.
408	Coffee.
117	Fruits.
90,814"

British Guiana.

"Settlement of unindentured East Indians on the Land.—There was considerable acquisition of landed property during the nine months under report, as appears from the following figures supplied by the Registrar, which deal with Chinese as well as Indians :—

	East Indians.		Chinese.
		Rs.		Rs.
Number of purchasers	413		19
Number of deeds	454		22
Total value	$96,898·05 =	3,02,806	$48,336·00 =	1,51,047
The highest price paid for one property was	$12,800·00 =	40,000	$14,000·00 =	43,750

"Plantations Unity and Lancaster on the east sea coast of Demerara, some 415 acres in extent, having been drained, irrigated and laid out in acre lots, are now fully taken up, the purchase price of $20 (Rs. 62·8) per acre having been readily paid, and the cultivation of rice and ground provisions is proceeding satisfactorily.

"Drained and irrigated land can be obtained at Clonbrook, on the east, and at Windsor Forest, La Jalousie, and Hague on the west sea coast of Demerara, in some cases by purchase at prices varying between $15 to $35 (Rs. 47 to Rs. 109) per acre or by lease at rates from $1 to $3 (Rs. 3 to Rs. 15) per acre for the first year, rising to $5 and $6 (Rs. 15 to Rs. 18) per acre thereafter.

"In addition to these ways by which East Indians may acquire land, anyone, under the Lands and Mines Regulations, may lease Crown lands for terms of 99 years, with right of renewal subject to a re-assessed rent, if the land has been reasonably usefully held. The cost for five acres, for instance, is as follows :—

	$		Rs.
Cost of application	5·00	=	15
" of survey	1·50	=	4½
One year's rent	1·00	=	3
Total initial cost	7·50	=	22½

"Rent thereafter $1 (Rs. 3) per annum for the whole five acre tract.

"For areas from 5 to 100 acres in extent the rent is 20 cents. (10 annas) per acre per annum ; and for larger tracts less still.

"The settlements at Huis't-Dieren, Helena, Whim, Bush, Lot and Maria's Pleasure, comprising between them some 2,943 acres, have enjoyed fair prosperity during the period of report.

"The following figures give the number and value of properties in the several towns and villages owned by East Indians as assessed for taxation for local purposes :—

	Nos.	Value.
		$	Rs.
Georgetown (capital)	258	296,435·00 =	9,26,359
New Amsterdam	84	66,950·00 =	2,09,219
Villages	7,846½	732,009·20 =	22,87,529
Total	8,188½	$1,095,394·20 =	Rs. 34,23,107

"The establishment of Agriculture Loan Banks will be, doubtless, a great stimulus to and settlement. There are now three : one in the island of Wakenam, county Essequibo, in which 78 East Indians have 152 one dollar shares ; another on the west coast, county Demerara, at Dem Amstel, in which six Indians hold 12 shares ; and the third at Ann's Grove, east coast, county Demerara, in which 34 have 128 shares.

"There were 7,756 East Indian depositors on the 31st December 1915, and they had at their credit a sum of $393,348·27 (81,947*l*. 11*s*. 1½*d*.) (Rs. 12,29,213). Both the number of depositors and the amount of savings are less than on 31st March 1915, when the figures were : Deposits, 8,774 ; savings, $502,626·80 (104,713*l*. 18*s*. 4½*d*.) (Rs. 15,70,709). Circumstances arising out of the war have, no doubt, considerably affected Savings Banks transactions but the lately established Savings Bank branches of the Colonial Bank and the Royal Bank of Canada in Georgetown and New Amsterdam and in the two large villages of Mahsica and Rose Hall have without doubt attracted a considerable share of the business hitherto enjoyed by the Post Office Savings Banks. The continued expansion of rice planting is also responsible in some considerable measure, providing as it does a remunerative investment for the people's savings."

"Occupation of free Indians.—There are now about 17,000 free Indians in the Colony, the majority of whom are employed in various manual occupations. Among these occupations may be mentioned the following :—

"Agricultural labours ; planters, shopkeepers, market gardners, traders, itinerant and otherwise ; goldsmiths, cart men ; domestic servants. There are no less than 369 trade and spirits licences taken out by East Indians.

"Settlement of free Indians on the Land.—A statement kindly furnished by the Honourable Collector-General is attached showing the value and extent of property owned by East Indian immigrants in the Island. This statement is only approximate and does not fully represent the true value of the property. It is shown that land owned by East Indians covers over 11,000 acres. In the parish of St. Mary alone 2,276 acres of land is owned by Indians. I estimate that the accumulated wealth of East Indians in this Island cannot fall short of 120,000*l*. (Rs. 1,800,000).

"Deposits.—The number of immigrant depositors in the Government Savings Bank on the 31st March 1916 was 1,383 and the amount at their credit was 15,700*l*. (Rs. 2,35,500). The reduction of the amount at credit compared with last year is largely due to the withdrawals by immigrants repatriated during the year. These immigrants who returned to India by the ship Ganges took with them drafts on the Bank of Bengal amounting to 2,824*l*. 19*s*. 2*d*. (Rs. 42,374), and jewellery valued at 1,132*l*. 16*s*. (Rs. 16,992). This represents an average saving per head (exclusive of immigrants returned as destitute and children) of 32*l*: 8*s*. 10*d*. (Rs. 487). The largest individual remittance was 283*l*. (Rs. 4,245).

"The statement alluded to is given below :—

"Native leases (i.e., leases of land by Indians from natives of the Colony).—Seven hundred and forty-two leases, comprising a total area of 5,744 acres, were registered in 1915, the largest total area leased in any province being 2,557 acres in Ba and Yasawas. The following table shows the number of leases issued and the area leased in each of the last nine years :—

"Deposits in Local Banks.—During the year fixed deposits were made by the Department in the local Banks on behalf of 106 depositors. The total sum at fixed deposit on the 31st December 1915 was 8,947*l* 0*s*. 2*d*. (Rs. 1,34,205), being 4,037*l*. 11*s*. 11*d*. (Rs. 60,564) less than the previous year. The decrease is no doubt due to the outbreak of war, resulting in an unusually large amount of money being buried. The following table shows the amount on fixed deposit in Government Savings Bank by Indian immigrants on the 31st December in each of the last five years:—

Year.	No. of depositors.	Balance to credit. £	s.	d.		Rs.

"Remittances.—The amount remitted by Indian immigrants through the Treasury was 1,965*l.* 16*s.* (Rs. 29,487) sent by 350 persons. This amount does not include the amount remitted by Madras immigrants through the Treasury, which was 1,425*l.* 11*s.* 4*d* (Rs 21,384) by 199 remitters, the average remittance for both Calcutta and Madras being 6*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* (Rs. 93). This total is exclusive of money remitted by immigrant passengers repatriated per S.S. Mutlah amounting to 843*l.* 17*s.* 2*d*, (Rs. 12,658). The following table shows the amount remitted through the Treasury in each of the last ten years:—

An ordinance of 1916 makes provision for the acquisition of land by the Colony and its improvement at Colonial expense for purposes of settlement of East Indians.

The total number of Indian freeholders and tenants in the Colony is now 11,043 occupying 115,635 acres."

9. The extracts above confirm the report made in 1913 by Mr. McNeil and Mr. Chimman Lal, the Commissioners appointed by the Government of India to report on the condition of Indian emigrants to the Colonies, that "the great majority of the emigrants exchanged grinding poverty with practically no hope of betterment for a condition varying from simple, but secure, comfort to solid prosperity."

10. In 1885 the Secretary of State for India laid down, as an indispensable condition of emigration from India to the Colonies, that . . . "Indian settlers who have completed the term of service to which they agreed, as a return for the expense of bringing them to the Colonies, will be in all respects free men with privileges no whit inferior to those of any other class of His Majesty's subjects resident in the Colonies." That condition has been fulfilled. On the expiration of his term of service the Indian takes his place in the community on the same terms as other inhabitants of the Colony, and Mr. Long finds it difficult to understand how the idea could have arisen in India that the Indian communities in these Colonies stand in any degree in a position of industrial or political inferiority as compared with the rest of the population.

11. At the general election in British Guiana, in 1916, an East Indian, Mr. J. A. Luckhoo, was elected to the local legislature for the division of South-East Essequibo. The unsuccessful candidate was an English planter. Mr. Luckhoo is the son of an Indian immigrant and of an Indian born in the Colony. He practices at the local bar. His brother, Mr. E. A. Luckhoo, a solicitor, who has held office as Mayor of the Municipality of New Amsterdam, was an unsuccessful candidate at the same election.

12. There were other unsuccessful East Indian candidates at this election, and details of their careers may be interesting as illustrating the prospect open to East Indians in the Colonies. One unsuccessful candidate is an East Indian who arrived in British Guiana in 1865 at the age of seven. In 1878 he started business as a butcher and has been very successful. He is described as one of the richest East Indians in the Colony, owner of an estate on the west coast, and of a racing stable. Another candidate, the grandson of indentured immigrants, is a practising barrister in the Colony. Another, who is a shop-keeper in Georgetown, orginally came to British Guiana under indenture to an estate. Another East Indian, a merchant in Georgetown, was selected by the Negro and Portuguese sections of a constituency to contest the seat, but was found ineligible for election as he had neglected to register as a voter. This candidate was born in the Colony, being the son of indentured immigrants. He returned to India with his parents, but came back to British Guiana in 1891 and went under indenture to a plantation.

13. The East Indian voters constitute 6·4 per cent. of the total electorate. On the basis of population the proportion should be much higher, as the Indian community forms 40 per cent. of the population. The reason is that East Indians, although equally eligible with other races both for the municipal and for the legislative vote, often do not trouble to go through the formality of registering themselves as voters. It is, however, anticipated locally that, as a result of the recent general election, there will be more disposition on their part to exercise the franchise.

14. The Legislative Council of Trinidad is not an elective body, and there is therefore no legislative franchise for any race in the Colony. One of the unofficial members nominated by the Crown is of East Indian descent. There is now an elective Town Council in Port of Spain, the capital of the island, and East Indians are, of course, fully eligible for the municipal vote and for membership. The Council is a very recent institution, and no statistics of East Indian voters are available.

15. In Jamaica the Legislative Council is partly elected. East Indians are eligible to vote for and to serve on the Council, as well as on the Parochical Boards which manage local affairs; but, as they form only 2 per cent. of the total population, their political activity is naturally less in evidence than in British Guiana. No statistics as to East Indian voters are available.

16. The question of Indian representation in Fiji has recently been under discussion with the Government of India, and Mr. Chamberlain is aware that, at their suggestion, the constitution of the Colony has been altered to admit of the appointment of a nominated member to the Legislative Council. The Governor has now appointed Badri Mahraj, who originally came to Fiji as an indentured immigrant and has since acquired considerable property and controls several hundred acres of cultivated land as well as a general store business.

17. Mr. Long trusts that the Government of India will take steps to make public, in such manner as they may think appropriate, the facts mentioned in this letter.

Extract from despatch from His Majesty's Secretary of State for India to the Government of India, No. 117-(Public), dated London, the 21st September 1917, and enclosure.

I have given very careful consideration in Council to the letter of Your Excellency's Government in the Commerce and Industry Department, No. 5-(Emigration), dated the 23rd March last, in which you set forth your conclusions on the subject of labour emigration from India to the more distant Crown Colonies. I agree with your view as to the unfortunate effect in India of the suggestion that indentured emigration might remain in force for five years more, a suggestion deprecated at the time by my predecessor [see the fifth enclosure to his Despatch No. 63-(Public), dated the 14th April 1916] As you have been informed, His Majesty's Government have decided that indentured emigration, temporarily prohibited on account of urgent military needs, cannot be resumed. I trust that you have been able to secure for this decision as wide a publicity, especially in those quarters which are not reached by English newspapers, as was obtained by the earlier reports.

2. I agree with Your Excellency's Government that any new system of emigration must be free from suspicion of liability to the three charges brought against the old system—that it was based on fraudulent recruitment, that it involved slavery for men, and that it resulted in the prostitution of women.

3. The letter of Your Excellency's Government was laid before the Inter-departmental Conference which after a session lasting some six weeks, has drawn up a new scheme for a system of free emigration, assisted by the Colonial Administrations. Advance copies of its Report have already been despatched to you, and I have in my telegram of the 24th July recommended that it should at once be published for general information and discussion. The Colonial Administrations concerned have represented the necessity for early publication of the Report in view of the condition of uncertainty prevailing amongst the interests affected. I now enclose 25 further copies. I have no wish to prejudice the full consideration which you will give to the scheme, and I think it essential that the people of India should be afforded every possible opportunity of examining a subject which is regarded as vitally concerning their national self-respect. The scheme is provisional, in the sense that it is necessarily one to be judged on the one hand by Your Excellency's Government, and on the other by the Colonial Administrations. Should the latter, or any of them, consider that the increased expenditure which its adoption will necessitate would make it unprofitable to employ imported Indian labour under the new conditions, the assisted emigration question, so far as India is concerned, will necessarily disappear in connection with such colonies or colony. If, on the other hand, you are unable to regard the scheme as regards any particular detail or details as satisfactory from the Indian point of view, I shall of course give full weight to your criticisms, and shall communicate them to the Colonial Office. Apart from questions of detail, the scheme as a whole appears to me to fulfil the conditions laid down in your Government's letter, as affording a means of enabling Indian labourers to emigrate to those colonies which desire to attract them, as eliminating so far as is humanly possible unsatisfactory features in the engagement of emigrants in India, and as securing for the emigrant labourers work under conditions of freedom, with facilities for repatriation if they do not desire to settle. The encouragement of family as opposed to individual emigration affords the only sure means of guaranteeing the moral welfare of the Indian communities overseas. I shall proceed later on to analyse and comment upon the details of the scheme. But at this point I would like to observe that the proposed scheme differs fundamentally from the present system. In place of indentured labour it is now proposed to establish a scheme of colonisation and one, I would add, that goes considerably beyond not only the requirements laid down by Your Excellency's Government, but also any scheme of assisted emigration hitherto devised for European settlers in the Dominions, since the latter have never been granted systematic State assistance if they desired to repatriate themselves after experience of colonial life.

4. The Indian claims have been met by the Colonial Office in a liberal and sympathetic spirit, and I would invite your particular attention to the fact that the benefits in the way of material and medical comforts, and other safeguards provided under the old system for labourers who had covenanted under indenture to work for a term of years, are under this scheme continued for labourers who are entirely free, and as to whose readiness to work the colonies have no such guarantee as was provided by those indentures.

5. I regret that Your Excellency's Government were unable to derive more assistance from those members of your Legislative Council whom you invited to discuss the question. You state that you feel the force of the arguments contained in the memorandum presented to you. But I am somewhat surprised to see that, though the signatories appear unconscious of the fact, and though it is not noticed in your letter, most of these arguments, if analysed, are applicable as much to free emigration to Ceylon and Malaya as to a reformed scheme of emigration to more distant colonies. Yet I understand that no real or reasonable objection is entertained to emigration to Ceylon and Malaya as such, though details have given rise to complaint, and it is indisputable that the Ceylon and Straits emigration is of far greater importance, and plays a far larger part in the economic life of India, than the numerically unimportant emigration to the West Indies or Fiji. As regards the latter, the fear that an invidious distinction would arise in the colonies between old and new immigrants—a fear not justified, as far as I know, by the experience of the abolition of indentures in the Malay States or in Assam—is met by the stipulation in the new scheme that the cancellation of all indentures is a necessary preliminary to the inception of free assisted emigration to any colony.

6. But consideration of this memorandum leads me to think it desirable, before proceeding to discuss the scheme in detail, to set down some general considerations which have not, I think, been presented, at any rate in full force, to public opinion in India.

7. I have already, in my Despatch No. 93, dated 10th August, commented on the extremely misleading, though not surprising, confusion between the self-governing Dominions and the Crown Colonies which underlies much that is said or written on the general question of emigration from India. While it is to be hoped that the attitude taken by the Dominions towards the question of India's representation at Imperial Conferences, and the actual proceedings at the recent Imperial War Conference, will tend to closer and more sympathetic relations between India and the Dominions, the political and economic objections entertained in the Dominions to the unrestricted entry of fellow-subjects whose standards differ so widely from those of the new countries must be expected to remain. It is natural enough that India should resent any proposal that her labouring classes should be imported for special local purposes and under exceptional conditions into territories which are not open to the general immigration of Indians. But no such question arises in the case of the Crown Colonies; Fiji and the British West Indies are as free to the Indian merchant or professional man as Ceylon or Malaya, while they have offered more favourable openings to Indians who desire to settle on the land. It is surely important that the distinction should be brought home to those who write and speak on the question of emigration, but I have noticed wide-spread and genuine misunderstanding.

8. The growing sense of Imperial solidarity is producing a wide feeling that the Empire as a whole cannot be indifferent to the prosperity of any of its component parts. The great sugar and other agricultural industries are not merely a matter of local concern to the colonies in which they are established but of real importance to the economic strength of the British Empire. I need hardly say that considerations of this kind, whether political or economic, cannot be allowed to stand in the way of the removal of actual abuses or the redress of real grievances. But they become relevant when indignation at abuses arising in particular localities out of certain features of the indentured system now abolished has developed into the doctrine that free Indian emigration under carefully devised safeguards should not be allowed to any country, Malaya excepted, in which Indians formerly worked under indenture. If the abuses are eliminated, and a free system of assisted emigration, coupled with a generous scheme of land settlement, is substituted for the old indentured system, this doctrine cannot be admitted either in the interests of the Indian people themselves, or as a principle of general policy. Its acceptance would constitute a new departure, wholly at variance with the principles as regards emigration and colonisation prevailing in all other parts of the Empire. The colonies in question have now a considerable number of Indian settlers, and it would be unfair to these to prevent more of their fellow-countrymen from joining them. It is probable that under the scheme now proposed some of the colonies will become largely Indian in population and character. This is a very important consideration and one that must have weight with Indian opinion.

10. I realise that any attempt to reintroduce indentured emigration under a new name would be rightly resented, and I do not under-rate the difficulties that surround the subject. But I would ask you to consider very carefully the present legal position. Emigration to the four British Colonies and Surinam is for the time being suspended by an order under the Defence of India Act. But when the war ends, and this emergency power is exhausted, the Emigration Act will at best enable you only to prohibit emigration under indenture to those Colonies. There is no power under that Act to declare unlawful or to restrict or regulate free or assisted emigration where no agreement to labour is entered into by emigrant before leaving India by sea. Unless the Act is amended, or is supplemented by another Act, emigration under such conditions as are suggested in the Report of the Conference, could not be prevented, but it would be unregulated, and would necessarily lack the supervision by Government officers which the Report contemplates.

11. Simple repeal of the present Emigration Act will therefore not meet the situation. Legislation in some form will be inevitable, and it is possible that you will be asked to prohibit the emigration of unskilled labourers who receive assistance to emigrate on the understanding that they will enter upon agreements overseas. But apart from other considerations, it would be difficult to prevent evasion of the provisions in such a bill discriminating between persons induced to emigrate in order to work on estates in the West Indies, and such free emigrants as have in the past gone in considerable numbers from the Punjab to Canada, South America, and the Far East, often in the hope of obtaining employment as manual labourers. The question requires very careful examination, and I trust that Your Excellency's Government will consider it fully. There is the further point to be borne in mind that you may be asked to modify the present system under which labour emigration to Ceylon and Malaya is free from any legal restriction or supervision. While I can understand your reluctance to undertake special legislation that could be represented as framed merely in the interests of Fiji, I greately doubt whether you will not in the obvious interests of India find it necessary to deal afresh by legislation with the whole system of labour emigration. If and when free assisted emigration is opened, you will find it nesessary to possess the penal powers conferred by the present Act in order to deal with possible malpractices by emigration agents in India.

12. It is obvious that the interests, agricultural and industrial, chiefly represented in the Legislative Councils, will not be anxious to see inducements held out to Indian labourers to leave the country. The passage from Lord Hardinge's speech quoted in the 9th paragraph of your letter appears somewhat to over-rate the actual mobility of labour within India. The option of migration to the jute areas of Eastern Bengal for part of the year, especially if it involves the expense of transporting his family, has not, I should suppose, presented itself with marked force to the labourer in remote parts of Madras. Temporary emigration to Malaya or Ceylon is far easier. But the local landholder, who has had a supply of labour available at low wages, is probably as reluctant to see labourers leave his district for Malaya or Eastern Bengal as for the West Indies. He has not been allowed hitherto to veto their emigration, but the feeling aroused by highly coloured accounts of the condition of Indians in distant colonies has produced objections based on philanthropic grounds which coincide somewhat closely with certain private economic interests. It is admitted that the labourer has the right to leave his district, and even to leave India, if he thinks that he can better his condition, but it is argued that emigration to distant colonies involves his degradation. I do not see that such a result necessarily follows under a carefully guarded system of colonization. As regards the past, the arguments appear to be based on reports about Fiji, and it is not clear why they should be held applicable to Trinidad or British Guiana.

13. I am not concerned to give an artificial stimulus to emigration from India, and the scheme now offered limits the functions of the Indian authorities to the supervision and inspection necessary to prevent abuses.

14. I now pass to the scheme itself. Its cardinal feature is the prominence given to provisions for encouraging the settlement of Indians in these colonies. The principle that the object of the indentured system should be "permanent colonisation, not the introduction of labour, much less of cheap labour" was enunciated by Lord Crewe in his Despatch to the Government of India, No. 83, Public of 17th May 1912, and was reiterated in his later Despatch No. 3, Public, dated 3rd January 1913. The Conference has adopted Lord Crewe's "main principle" as the guiding principle of its new scheme of free emigration, and has coupled with it terms of repatriation intended to provide liberally for the case of an immigrant who for any reason may desire to return to India and prefer not to take advantage of the facilities offered him for settling in the colony. While the emigrant who wishes merely to stay a short time in the colony can freely utilise the new arrangements, the Conference was convinced of the greater importance of encouraging the emigration of permanent settlers. The cost of the introduction of each emigrant will be increased greatly under the new scheme; and while the colonies are prepared to pay this price for permanent settlers they would find it financially impossible to continue to pay it for the temporary labourer. The Conference there had advisedly introduced into the new scheme no special provisions to attract casual labour, and believes that the attractions offered will induce most immigrants of this class eventually to settle in the colony.

15. The scheme contemplates that on his first arrival the emigrant will undertake work for a "probationary" period under selected employers. All experience has shown that when an Indian first lands in a colony he is quite unfit to enter immediately upon the life of a settler. He requires to learn colonial ways of life and work and colonial methods of agriculture. It may even be that through the change in climatic conditions he may develop symptoms of ill-health or of disease requiring medical treatment which if left to himself he would never be in a position to obtain. A "probation" of six months is therefore provided under selected employers in selected, mainly agricultural, industries.

16. The Protector of Immigrants will select for each immigrant his first employer, and will no doubt be guided in his selection by each man's individual circumstances, and particularly by such a fact as that he already has friends or relations on any particular estate. After the first six months the immigrant will be perfectly free to move from one employer to another at a month's notice, and even during the first six months he can always be transferred by the Protector to another employer should the Protector see reason to move him. During this probationary period the immigrant will learn how to work; he will learn colonial methods of agriculture; he will live under proper medical supervision and in healthy houses and surroundings; he will receive free rations for his wife and family in certain conditions; and in return he will provide voluntarily the labour upon which the prosperity of the colony depends. This part of the scheme appears to me to be essential in the interests of the immigrant during the early period of his residence in a new country.

17. The Conference entirely agreed with the conclusion stated in paragraph 15 of Your Excellency's Despatch of the 23rd March, that it was essential that all the expenses connected with the introduction of the immigrant should be borne by a common fund. Its proposal complies with this principle, but it found it difficult to lay down precisely the method by which the common fund should be raised. The objection that any rate levied from the employer operated indirectly to handicap the immigrant in competition with other labour was fully recognised. It has been sought to reduce this handicap as far as possible by limiting to the immigrant's own lifetime or to a period of years the time during which an employer would be liable to pay the contribution. Three alternatives have been proposed. It will be for the colonies to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of each and decide which they will adopt.

18. As the immigrant will be entirely free to choose his employers it is essential in his own interests that the Colonial Government should have power to decide who may and who may not employ him. This is secured by the provision that suitable persons will be entered in a Register of approved employers by the Protector of Immigrants, and that any person not so entered who employs an Indian during his first three years of residence will be liable to prosecution. At the same time, in order to make this provision as little restrictive as possible of the area within which an immigrant may seek employment, the only qualification required for obtaining entry in the Register will be that the employer can provide conditions of employment and living which the Protector considers satisfactory. It is felt that during the early years of the colonist in a new country this provision will be an advantage as guaranteeing for the worker protection somewhat analogous to that provided by the Factory Acts in this country. After three years, when the colonist has become acquainted with the conditions of his new home, it will no longer be necessary.

19. The Conference has laid down in outline a settlement scheme which contemplates that one department of the Government in each colony will be responsible for helping the immigrant in every way to settle upon the land should he after at least three years' experience of life in the colony decide to do so. The conditions of grant and other details could necessarily only be stated in very general terms, but the Conference attached the greatest importance to a properly regulated settlement scheme to facilitate the settlement of Indians on the land, and hoped by stipulating that a definite department should undertake this task, that a serious attempt will be made in each colony to systematise settlement and to remove needlessly obstructive regulations wherever they exist. The Conference believed that this was the most vitally important of all its proposals, and that if worked in the spirit in which it has been drawn up, it will have far-reaching consequences not merely in securing the happiness and prosperity of the Indian immigrants, but in developing the natural resources of the colonies and enabling them to take a more important position in the Empire. If Your Excellency's Government so desire, I shall be glad to confer with the Secretary of State for the Colonies as to the more detailed arrangements that it will be necessary to make for the development of land settlement in the colonies concerned.

20. That the above belief is well founded has already been amply proved by the condition of those colonies where the settlement of Indians has made most progress. And if it can once be realised in India what an extremely important part the domiciled Indian community already plays in such colonies as Mauritius and Trinidad, and may equally play in the future in the other colonies also, there can hardly be room for doubt that the objections to emigration raised by Indian public opinion upon the grounds that these representatives of India come before the world as bondsmen and slaves will speedily disappear, now that the objectionable feature of the indenture has been removed and the emigrant goes as a free man under one of the most liberal schemes of emigration that has ever been devised in any country.

21. On the other hand, to meet cases where the immigrant may decide that a colonial life does not suit him and wishes to return to India, the Conference has agreed upon generous terms of repatriation which mark a distinct advance upon the terms at present prevailing, especially upon those for the West Indies where only a half passage is granted after 10 years. The terms proposed by Your Excellency in your letter of the 23rd March last received most careful consideration, but the Conference found itself unable to accept them. After discussing the question from every point of view, it came to the conclusion that to lay down such very short periods as qualifying for assisted and free passages would in fact be a grave error which might seriously imperil the success of the whole scheme. The Conference was deeply impressed by the consideration that after one year's residence, and indeed to some extent even after three years' residence, the immigrant will hardly have acquired sufficient knowledge of the prospects offered by life in the colony to resist the immediate inducement of a return to India, even though his return before he has been able to make appreciable savings involves poverty. The opportunity of returning would come at the most critical period of an immigrant's residence, and there can be little doubt that many good colonists would be lost, and many emigrants debarred from the prospect of a prosperous career, by an offer of too speedy repatriation. Short periods for repatriation would in fact be inconsistent with the principle that a sound immigration system should have for its object permanent colonisation, not merely the introduction of temporary labour. Indeed, on the ground of the probable enormous cost, the Colonial Office was quite unable to agree to such short periods for repatriation, and to have insisted upon them as you proposed would have created an impossible situation for which the India Office representatives could see no justification in principle. A system under which emigration means merely the transit of labourers to a distant country and their speedy return before they have had any real opportunity of even material benefit, seems to me open to grave objections and certainly detrimental to the emigrants' self-respect. Indians would, it is true, have ceased to bear the stigma of indenture, but the position of a migratory labourer is not one that inspires respect. The terms now conceded by the Colonial Office are far more liberal than those at present in force, and when it is remembered that the whole trend of policy in recent years has been to curtail the grant of repatriation, the terms now proposed by the Conference must be considered the most satisfactory that could be expected.

22. The report makes it clear that the old indentured system is abolished. Future emigrants will be entirely free to work for whom they please, subject to a six months' probationary period and subsequently to a month's notice of leaving. Provision is made at the same time that all existing indentures shall be cancelled, and terms of repatriation have been drawn up for labourers whose indentures are thus cancelled. These terms necessarily could not be quite so generous as those for future immigrants. Persons who emigrated under the old terms definitely accepted them and cannot reasonably expect to be placed in exactly the same position as regards repatriation as persons coming under the new terms: but at least none obtain worse conditions, and some obtain very much better conditions, than under the indentured system, while all alike receive the great concession of the cancellation of their indentures and participation in the settlement scheme.

23. The difficult sex problem received close attention. In framing its recommendations the Conference had always before it the evils brought to light in the past and endeavoured to guard against their recurrence. One of the conditions laid down in your letter is that a proper sex proportion should be maintained, and from the moral standpoint the most essential condition for the acceptance of any scheme undoubtedly is that it shall secure this. But definite measures devised to attain this end have not in the past been successful. The attempt, by fixing a definite proportion of women to men, to prevent inequality of the sexes has been proved by experience a failure. It was perhaps hardly realised how difficult it must be under the conditions of early marriage prevailing in India to secure that adult single women of respectable antecedents should take part in emigration, and in practice the chief result of the rule was to force recruiters to seek out women who were either of bad repute, or were involved in domestic troubles, to make up the required proportion. The Conference has not only advisedly refrained from repeating this provision, but it has also prohibited the assisting of unprotected women to emigrate. It was, after close consideration, found impossible to introduce any provision that single men should only be assisted to emigrate in strict proportion to the number of families emigrating. It was feared that a provision of this kind would be evaded by underhand methods, difficult of detection, and possibly giving rise to further abuses, while such a provision would make it difficult for men to emigrate with the idea of sending for their families later if they desired to settle permanently in the colony.

24. The Conference believed very strongly that no artifical rules of this kind will remedy the disproportion of the sexes without creating as in the past further evils, and that the only satisfactory solution of this problem lies in encouraging in every possible way the emigration of families. The greatest emphasis has therefore been laid upon the necessity for encouraging the emigration of married couples with children, and particularly with young marriageable daughters who may become in the colonies the wives of other immigrants. To encourage families to emigrate provision has been made for the grant of free rations to children during their first year of residence, and it has been declared that non-working dependents will not be rejected merely on account of old age or because they are physically unfit for work. But here again no definite rules can be laid down, and the attainment of the object in view will depend mainly upon the action of the controlling staff who must show their subordinates in every possible way that they regard success in this respect as of the utmost importance.

25. The proposals regarding the emigration staff in India follow mainly the lines of the present organization, but the unsatisfactory bonus system has been abolished as the method of payment of the "emigration agent," though the possibility of small extra grants of money to reward meritorious work during the year has not been overlooked. A grade of Inspectors between the Emigration Commissioner and the emigration agents is provided for in cases where the agents are too numerous or too scattered for the Commissioner to supervise them properly alone. The Conference felt that there already existed in the District Magistrate and his local subordinates a sufficient local inspecting agency, and it did not see that any good purpose would be served by a formal proposal to increase the number of inspecting agencies; but it will be always open to you to set up any further inspecting machinery that may seem to be required.

26. The Conference discussed the question of confining emigration to particular areas in India, as proposed in your letter, but did not see its way to make precise provision for this, though the advantage of obtaining an immigrant population homogeneous in language and customs was fully recognized by the Colonial Office representatives. While it seems probable that emigrants will in the future be attracted chiefly from Madras, the Conference did not desire to isolate the Hindustani communities now in the colonies by recommending an arbitrary restriction. In regard to depôts the proposals provide that both the district and the central depôts shall be perfectly open, and that emigrants shall be under no restraint whatever while staying in them. Your suggestion that non-officials should be appointed as visitors to depôts was willingly agreed to by the representatives of the Colonial Office.

27. The social and political conditions of emigrants in the colonies engaged the attention of the Conference, and proposals have been framed on the subject of education, marriage and divorce, and political rights. Education, as the Conference points out, is already widely diffused in the West Indies and the same position is being reached in Fiji. The proposals as to registration of marriage mark a distinct advance upon the present law and will, it is hoped, provide immigrants with an easy method of legalising marriages performed according to their own customs, while the proposals as to divorce are intended to restrict indiscriminate divorces and yet provide a simple method of legalising such as cannot be avoided. On the question of representation in the Fiji Legislative Council, the Fiji Government have already made a valuable political concession, and are prepared to consider the possibility of placing Indians on the same terms as Europeans.

28. This summary of the recommendations of the Conference is not exhaustive, but points not discussed above, such as the suggestion that Indian surgeons might be employed on emigrant ships, seem to require no explanation. I am confident that Your Excellency's Government will accord the scheme your careful and unbiassed consideration, and that you will not fail to view it in connection with the wider Imperial aspect already alluded to by me. I would invite your special attention to the enclosed letter* in which the Secretary of State for the Colonies discusses the Report of the Conference.

* 26th July.

29. The recommendation as to periodical visits by persons nominated by the Government of India was included because of the desire of the Colonial Office to give all possible facilities for watching the welfare of the emigrants; but it will, of course, be for the Government of India to decide as to the despatch of their representatives.

30. As regards emigration to Dutch and French colonies, I am in correspondence with the Foreign Office on the question of procedure. I agree that the revival of actual emigration to the French colonies is impossible; but, taking certain other considerations into account, I am not at present convinced that the formal determination of the Convention of 1861 is desirable.

31. The position as regards Surinam is different, but you will agree as to the impossibility, if the Netherlands Government should desire to import free immigrants under a new system, of allowing emigration to foreign territory until the economic needs of British colonies are fully met. Apart from this, the new scheme of colonisation and land settlement could not well be applied or enforced in foreign territory. It therefore seems unlikely that it could in any case be extended to Surinam.

32. I desire to express my appreciation of the help given to the Conference by the extensive knowledge and willing industry of Mr. Marjoribanks, Indian Civil Service, and Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy, C.I.E., and to inform you that in Mr. R. H. Ellis, Indian Civil Service, the Conference found a most competent and energetic secretary. I have already expressed my regret that Sir James Meston and Sir Satyendra Sinha could take part only in informal preliminary discussion, but I know that my predecessor was able to take advantage of their presence in this country in putting before the Secretary of State for the Colonies the Indian point of view, and that their expression of opinion produced a marked effect.

ENCLOSURE.

Colonial Office to India Office.

No. 35794.

Downing Street,
26th July 1917.

I am directed by Mr. Secretary Long to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant enclosing the Report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Assisted Emigration from India to British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji.

2. Mr. Long notes that the Report recommends to the Government of India and to the Governments of the Colonies concerned the establishment in future of a scheme of aided colonisation which would be entirely free. He would welcome the abolition of the existing system of indentured emigration and all the features of that system, whether social or political, which have given rise to so much adverse criticism in India and have been regarded as repugnant to Indian national self-consciousness; and he is aware that the representatives of the industries concerned take the same view. He desires to place on record the fact that before the expression of feeling in India became so pronounced the Colonies had shown every disposition to meet Indian opinion in the matter so far as it is possible to do so.

3. In particular I am to point out that the Colonies concerned are anxious to afford Indian immigrants exactly the same legal, political and religious rights, privileges and duties as are afforded to the other inhabitants of whatever race. They wish to add sufficient material advantages to attract a supply of labour sufficient to maintain their industries and to furnish trained Colonists; but it is impossible to increase these advantages beyond a point which the industries can bear; and I am to express Mr. Long's opinion that these offered under the proposed scheme approach, if indeed in some cases they do not exceed, the limit of expenditure which, on any reasonable assumption of prices, the greater part of the staple industries, especially sugar, can afford.

4. The encouragement of the emigration of whole families, which is in itself a desirable feature of the scheme, will make the proportion of passages to working emigrants higher than under the existing system, especially as the women will be under no obligation to work and non-working dependants are not to be rejected medically merely on the ground of physical incapacity or the score of age. Further, the substitution for the present system of five years' labour under indenture, of a period of three years' free work under an approved employer followed by liberal provisions for settling on the land will in all probability necessitate the introduction of a larger number of labourers annually if an equivalent labour force is to be maintained. Also the experience of Assam points to the aggregate productivity of the labour force being reduced by the provision of attractions such as the extra garden ground and allotments contemplated by the proposed scheme. Mr. Long would emphasize that the effect of these different proposals will be cumulative and they will thus greatly increase the cost of introduction. In addition, the proposals for improved housing, for the issue of free rations to children and to pregnant and nursing women for a minimum wage based on the cost of living and other minor concessions will all involve additional expenditure.

5. An equally important factor which again is cumulative in its effect is the fact that the cost of passages will be much higher after the war. It is impossible to give an accurate forecast of the amount or duration of the increase, but enquiries that have been made point to the probability that the actual contract price for passengers will be for some years as much as 100 per cent. higher than the minimum pre-war figure. The serious effect of this increase will be appreciated when it is stated that the cost of passages at the cheapest rate to British Guiana had by 1916 already risen to 16*l*. as compared with 11*l*. 12*s*. 6*d*., the cost of passages to the Colony before the war, and the rate to Fiji had increased from 6*l*. under a contract made in 1913 to 15*l*. under a special contract made for the year 1917.

6. The higher cost of passages will for some years add very considerably to the expenses of repatriation, which will also be affected by the increase in the assistance to be given for return passages, by the shorter period of residence after which such assistance will be forthcoming, and by the greater number of introductions and consequently of repatriations. Experience alone can determine how far these factors will be offset by the numbers of immigrants induced to stay in the Colony by the local land settlement schemes.

7. Mr. Long does not put forward the increased expense as a reason for rejecting or modifying those provisions of the scheme from which it arises. Indeed he welcomes those provisions on their merits. But as the question of cost is not one on which the Government of India can easily obtain first-hand information, he thinks it well to bring to their notice an aspect of the scheme which might otherwise escape consideration. It is for this reason that he has felt it right to call attention to the gravity of the financial aspect of the problem since, if the burden imposed on the industries is too heavy, the effect will be widespread, particularly in the sugar industry. Many natives of India are already operating as sugar planters, and the proportion of cane produced by Indians increases yearly. The failure of the staple industries of the Colonies concerned would most seriously affect the fortunes of the Indian settlers, now by far the most numerous section of the Indian communities concerned.

Ordered that a copy of the above Resolution be forwarded to all Local Governments and Administrations, in continuation of Resolution No. 10294, dated the 1st September 1917, and that it be published in the supplement to the Gazette of India.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE AND AGRICULTURE.

Season and Crop Prospects for the week ending Saturday, 16th March 1918.

Burma.—The week was practically rainless in Upper Burma. Cultivation of spring rice and other crops and harvesting of miscellaneous crops continue. Standing crops are good. Cattle are generally healthy. The price of unhusked rice in Rangoon has risen slightly but is below normal. The market for white rice is quiet at Rupees 230 for specials.

Assam.—The weather was generally seasonable. More rain is wanted in places. Harvesting of mustard is almost finished. Pressing of sugarcane, pruning of tea and ploughing for autumn and winter rice and jute still continue. Sowing of autumn rice has commenced. Outturn and prospects of crops are generally fair to good. Cattle disease is reported from three districts. The price of common rice shows a tendency to rise generally.

Bengal.—Light rain fell during the week in a few places. More rain is, however, urgently wanted throughout the province. Planting of sugarcane and harvesting of spring crops continue. Sowing of autumn crops is being retarded for want of rain. The average price of common rice for the province has risen by about 0·6 per cent. as compared with that of the preceding week.

Bihar and Orissa.—The week was practically rainless. Pressing of sugarcane continues. Harvesting of spring crops, planting of sugarcane and preparation of lands for the next season's crops are in progress. Standing crops are generally doing well but rain is needed in several districts. The price of common rice has risen in three districts, fallen in six and remained stationary in the remaining districts as compared with that of the preceding week. Cattle disease is reported from thirteen districts. The condition of standing crops in the Feudatory States of Orissa is fair.

United Provinces.—With the exception of light showers in a few places the week was rainless. Harvesting, threshing and irrigation of spring crops, pressing, sowing and irrigation of and preparation of land for sugarcane, sowing and irrigation of extra crops and extraction of opium continue. Standing crops are doing well. Condition of agricultural stock is good and little cattle disease is reported. Fodder continues to be dear in parts but is generally available in sufficient quantities. Prices are falling.

Punjab.—Moderate rain has fallen in parts of the central and submontane tracts and light rain elsewhere except in a few south-eastern districts. It has proved very beneficial to standing spring crops and to the sowing of extra spring crops. Standing wheat and other crops on irrigated areas are everywhere in average to good condition. Unirrigated crops are either average or below average and more rain is wanted for them. Extra spring and sugarcane crops are being sown to a normal or below normal extent. Cattle are generally healthy but fodder is scarce in some districts. Prices are generally stationary and range between warning and scarcity rates except in the south-east where they are between normal and warning rates. Prices of wheat :—Rawalpindi 6½; Lahore 7¾, Ambala and Ferozepore 8½ and Lyallpur 9 seers per rupee.

North-West Frontier Province.—Rain fell throughout the province. Prospects of spring crops are generally average. Sowings of tobacco, sugarcane and extra spring crops have commenced in some places. Wheat—Peshawar $7\frac{14}{16}$ and Dera Ismail Khan $9\frac{6}{16}$ seers per rupee.

Jammu.—Prices are fluctuating slightly. Rain was general. There is nothing else noteworthy.

Central India.—Slight showers fell in Indore and Malwa. Spring crops are being irrigated and harvested. Land is being prepared for autumn crops in Southern States. Standing crops and probable outturn are fair to good. Agricultural stock is generally good. Prices are high.

Kashmir.—The week was generally wet and cool. Standing crops in Baramulla and Muzaffarabad are in fair condition. Cattle are generally healthy. Prices are high in Mozaffarabad and normal elsewhere.

Rajputana.—The weather was cloudy. Irrigation of spring crops is nearing completion and harvesting is commencing. Prospects are good. Cattle are in good condition. Prices are falling slightly.

Central Provinces.—The weather continues to be warm and cloudy but nights and mornings are still cool. Balaghat received half an inch of rain accompanied by hail stones. Light showers fell in five other districts nowhere exceeding 16 cents. Spring production is estimated as good in Chhattisgarh, fair to good in Nagpur, Berar and parts of Jubbulpore and Nerbudda divisions and poor in Seoni, Hoshangabad, Betul, Chindwara and Harsud tahsil. Harvesting is in progress. Gram sells cheaper by 3¾ seers per rupee in Damoh. Other variations are insignificant but generally show a slight fall.

Feudatory States.—Reaping of spring crops continues.

Bombay.—Slight rain fell during the week in parts of Sind, Kolaba, Kanara, Nasik, Panch Mahals, Ahmednagar, Satara and Belgaum. Standing crops are good except in parts of Larkana and Hyderabad, Thar and Parkar where they have been slightly damaged by rain, rats and insects. Spring harvesting continues. Cotton picking is progressing in Gujarat, West Khandesh, Carnatic, Kathiawar, Baroda, Cutch and Kalkapur. Agricultural Stock is sufficient. Prices of food grains are generally steady.

Hyderabad.—Slight showers fell in parts of Aurangabad, Bhir, Nander and Usmanabad districts. Spring harvesting continues. Crop conditions are the same as reported last week. Late rice is fair and is being weeded. It suffered from blight in parts of Nalgonda. Cattle are healthy. Prices of grains in districts are the same as last week but juar sells at 5 seers only in Bhir, Parbhani and Bidar districts.

Mysore.—The week was rainless. Standing crops are good. Harvesting of dry and wet crops is proceeding. Outturn is fair. Cattle are generally healthy. Prices are generally stationary.

Coorg.—The weather was hot. Picking of coffee and threshing of rice is nearing completion. Cattle are generally healthy. Prices of food grains are high.

Madras.—The week was rainless. Standing crops are fair to good generally. Harvesting of paddy, sugarcane and dry crops is proceeding with outturn fair to normal generally. Sowings of paddy, sugarcane and dry crops are proceeding normally. Condition of cattle is generally good. Prices are fairly steady.

COTTON PRESS RETURN.

No. 8 OF 1917-18.

THE COTTON SEASON 1917-18.

The yield of the cotton crop of 1917-18 is estimated at 4,035,000* bales on an area of 24,781,000 acres, as compared with 4,489,000 * bales on an area of 21,745,000 acres, the revised final figures of last year. There is a decrease of 10 per cent in outturn. It will be seen from the appended tables that cotton is coming in much slower than last year. There were 453,000 bales of cotton pressed in the pressing factories, and 151,000 bales received in the spinning mills, from 1st September to 31st December, 1917, as against 718,000 bales and 165,000 bales, respectively, during the corresponding period of last year, or a decrease of 37 and 8 per cent, respectively. The figures for the Native States of Hyderabad, Central India, Rajputana, and Mysore are, as will be seen from the footnotes to the tables, incomplete and have been excluded from this comparison.

* Revised since the publication of the final general memorandum on 16th February, 1918.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The returns of Indian imports and exports including re-exports of merchandise (exclusive of treasure and Government stores) by sea during the nine months of the present financial year show a trade balance (excluding treasure) in favour of India of over R56 crores or 12 per cent below that of the corresponding period of the previous year. Last year the balance in favour of India in the nine months was nearly R64 crores.

India's Balance of Trade in the nine months, April to December 1915, 1916, and 1917 was as follows :—

Balance of Trade	—	—	—

As the publication of the treasure figures has been temporarily discontinued, it is not possible to give here the net (private) exports from April to December, nor the net balance of trade in the same period. It may be of interest to note that the net (private) exports, including treasure, are considerably below those of 1916 and also below those of 1915.

The total exports of Indian Merchandise in the nine months amounted to over R161 crores, of which R89 crores went to ports within the British Empire, and R72 crores to ports outside the Empire. The United Kingdom took 25·7 per cent of the exports, followed by Japan 14·2 per cent, the United States 11·5 per cent, and France 3·8 per cent. Italy took 3·2 per cent and Egypt 12·7 per cent, but a considerable portion of the shipments to Egypt was transit trade, the exports being consigned to Port Said for orders. During the nine months there were imported into India goods of the value of nearly R111 crores. Of this amount over R73 crores were sent from ports within the Empire, R63 crores alone coming from British ports. The principal exporter to India, apart from the United Kingdom, was Japan which exported goods to the value of over R11 crores. The United States were the third largest exporter and Java the fourth.

The following figures showing India's trade with the British Empire and Allies and the Neutral countries during the nine months of the three official years 1915-16, 1916-17, and 1917-18 are interesting :—

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA

Second Forecast WINTER OILSEEDS (Rape, Mustard, and Linseed), 1917-18.

This forecast is based upon reports received from provinces where rape, mustard, and linseed are grown to any considerable extent. Those provinces contain 98·8 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard and 98·9 per cent of the total linseed area in British India. Of the Native States, estimates are furnished by Hyderabad and the Native States in the Bombay Presidency (including Baroda). No report is made by any other Native State. The condition of the crop, referred to below, generally relates to that prevailing in the latter part of February.

The present condition and prospects of the crops are on the whole from fair to good. Absence of winter rains has somewhat affected the rapeseed crop in Assam and the linseed crop in the Central Provinces and Bengal. Rain is badly wanted for the crops in the Punjab.

I

The total area under rape and mustard, so far as reported, amounts to 3,942,000 acres (excluding the "mixed" crop of the United Provinces, for which no estimate is at present available). This is 51,000 acres or 1 per cent below the revised figure at the corresponding date of last year. The detailed figures for the provinces are :—

This is 232,000 acres, or 9 per cent, above the area at the corresponding date of last year. The detailed figures for the provinces are :—

The provincial reports are summarised below :—

Rape and Mustard

United Provinces (40·2 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The total area sown with the unmixed crop was estimated in the first forecast, issued in December last, at 160,000 acres, which is 29 per cent below the area reported at the corresponding date of last year. This figure holds good in the present report. No estimate of the area for the mixed crop is at present available.* There was slight rain in December and January over most of the provinces, but only in a few districts it was heavy enough to benefit the crops. February was rainless The crop is reported to have also suffered in places from insect pests. For the provinces as a whole the outturn is estimated at from 85 to 90 per cent of the normal.

Bengal (20·4 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The area sown is reported to be 1,149,000 acres, which is 6 per cent short of the area reported at the corresponding date last year. Since the issue of the first forecast in December dry weather has prevailed. Although at first beneficial, the weather has latterly been much too dry. The average outturn per acre is at present estimated at 83 per cent of the normal, as against 89 per cent estimated at this date last year.

Punjab (17·1 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The area sown is reported to be 1,006,000 acres (of which 382,000 acres are irrigated), as compared with 1,123,000 acres estimated at this date last year, or a decrease of 10 per cent. The Director of Land Records, Punjab, remarks that the area shown in the corresponding forecast of last year was an overestimate. As compared with the actual area of last year the present estimate shows a decrease of only 1 per cent. The area under toria (an early variety of rapeseed) is reported to amount to 287,000 acres (mostly irrigated), and the yield of it (which was harvested in December and January) was generally normal. The condition and prospects of other oilseeds (rape, mustard, and taramira), which are sown mostly on unirrigated land, are generally below average, and rain is badly wanted for them.

Bihar and Orissa (11·4 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The area sown is estimated at 827,000 acres, which is 9 per cent above the area reported at this date last year. The increase is attributed to favourable weather conditions at the time of sowing. Climatic conditions have also been favourable on the whole for the growth of the crops. According to district reports the yield is estimated at 90 per cent of the normal, but the Director of Agriculture thinks this to be an underestimate and believes that the average outturn will not fall short of the normal.

Assam (4·7 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The area is estimated at 273,000 acres, which is 2 per cent below last year's area. The weather was generally good at sowing time, but want of rain since the issue of the preliminary forecast has been unfavourable. The average outturn per acre is estimated at 76 per cent of the normal, as against 77 per cent last year, and the total yield is accordingly estimated at 47,000 tons against 48,000 tons last year.

Bombay and Sind (3·3 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The total area reported is 364,000 acres (77,000 acres

* The area under rape and mustard sown interspersed with other crops, such as gram, barley, etc., is given in the final forecast published in June being in the Native States), which is 25 per cent above the area reported at the corresponding date last year. Favourable inundation and sufficient rains extended cultivation of the crop in Sind, except in Hyderabad and Thar and Parkar. The condition of the crop is reported to be fair everywhere, except in Nawabshah, where it was slightly damaged by frost. Elsewhere in the Presidency the crop is doing well.

North-West Frontier Province (1·7 per cent of the total area under rape and mustard in British India).—The total area sown up to the end of January is estimated at 155,000 acres, as compared with 92,000 acres reported at this date last year, or an increase of 68 per cent. It is, however, stated that the area in the corresponding forecast of last year was underestimated. The condition of the standing crop is reported to be generally average at present.

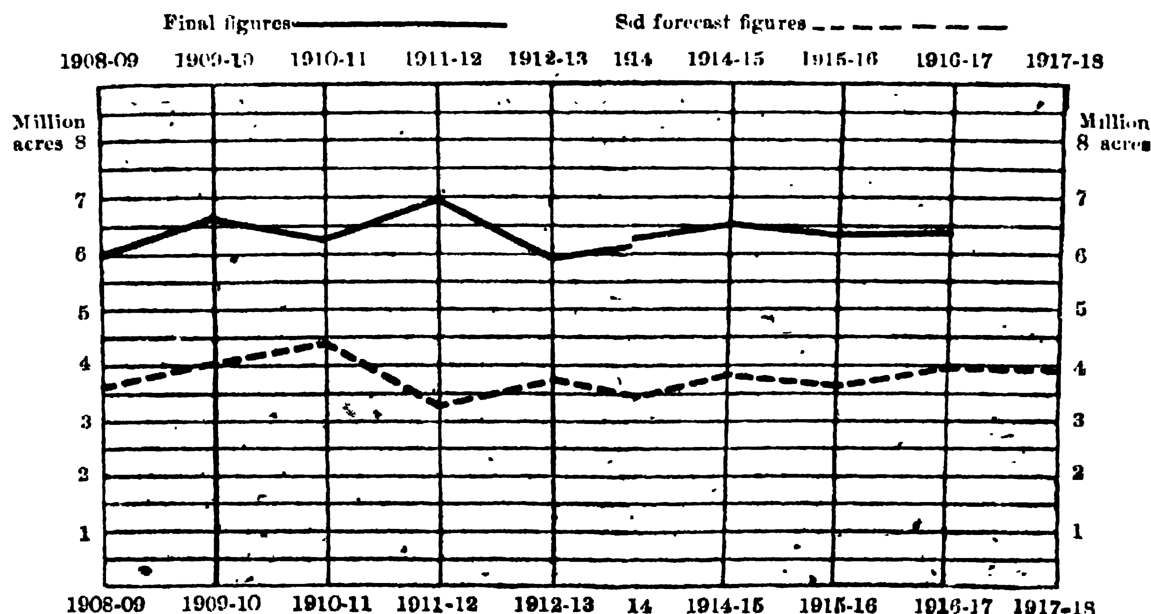
Hyderabad reports 8,000 acres under mustard as against 6,000 acres at this date last year.

Linseed.

Central Provinces and Berar (38·3 per cent of the total area under linseed in British India).—The area sown is reported to be 1,190,000 acres, which is 6 per cent above the area reported at this date last year. Favourable climatic conditions at sowing time, good prices, and replacement of spoilt jawar and cotton by linseed mainly account for the expansion in area. Germination was successful, but some resowing was necessary in parts of a few districts. Absence of winter showers, cold winds, and cloudy weather subsequently damaged the crop in parts of several districts. For both the Central Provinces and Berar together the outturn is estimated at 98 per cent of the normal.

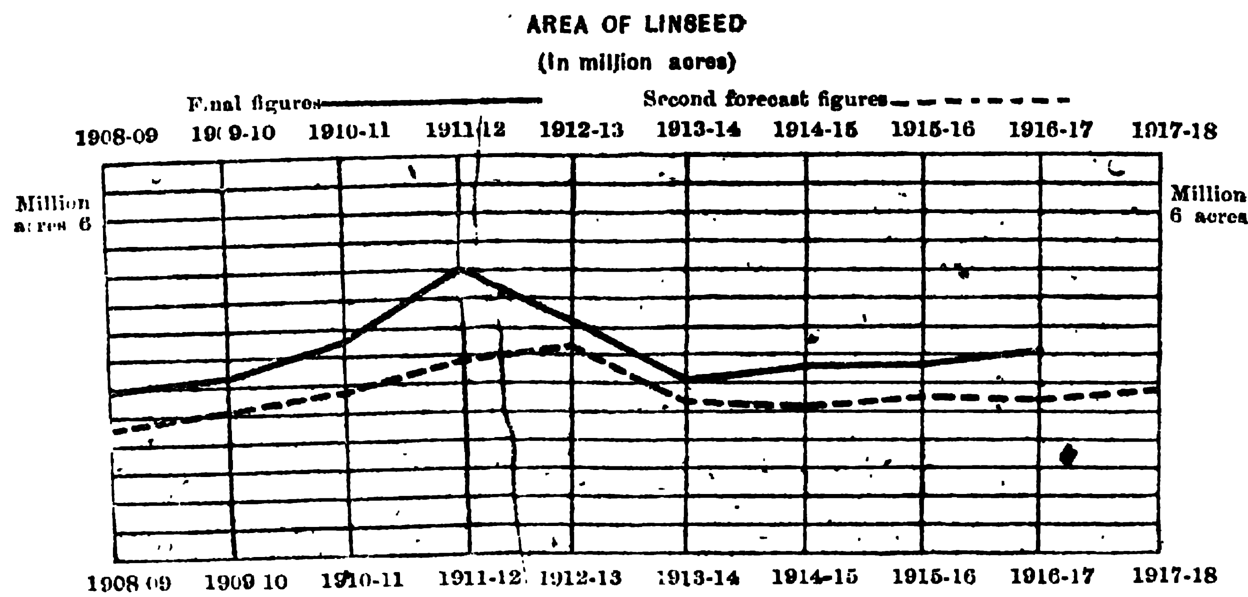
United Provinces (30·2 per cent of the total area under linseed in British India).—The area under the unmixed crop was estimated in the first forecast to be 350,000 acres, which is 15 per cent above the area reported at the corresponding date of last year. The figure remains unchanged. No estimate of the area under linseed grown in combination with other crops is available at present.* The rain in December and January was slight, except in a few districts where it was heavy enough to benefit the crop. February was rainless. In the Bundelkhand and the eastern districts, where linseed is largely sown unmixed, the prospects are generally favourable, and the crop is estimated at from 90 to 95 per cent of the normal.

Bihar and Orissa (18·9 per cent of the total area under linseed in British India).—The total area sown is reported to be 737,000 acres, which is 16 per cent above the area reported at this date last year. Climatic conditions have on the whole been favourable, and the crop is reported to be good in Bihar and Chota Nagpur and fair in Orissa. According to the estimates of the district officers the average outturn is estimated at 98 per cent of the normal as against 9? per cent last year. The provincial Director of Agriculture remarks that the outturn appears to be underestimated in some districts and that it will not be below normal (100 per cent).



Bengal (5·6 per cent of the total area under linseed in British India).—The total area sown is reported to be 144,000 acres, which is 8 per cent short of the area reported at this date last year. The weather has been dry since the issue of the first forecast in December, which, although at first beneficial, has latterly proved to be much too dry. The average outturn is estimated at 69 per cent of the normal as against 75 per cent estimated at this date last year.

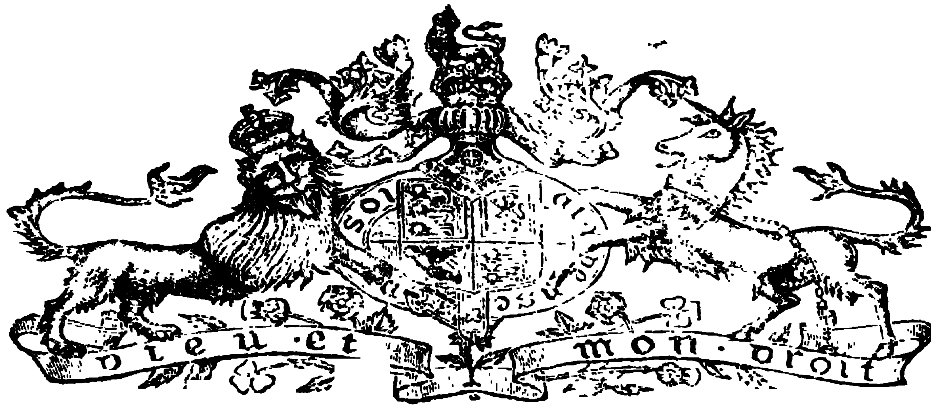
Bombay (4·7 per cent of the total area under linseed in British India).—The total area sown is reported to be 136,000 acres (14,000 acres being in the Native States), which is 10 per cent above the area reported at this date last year. The season has been favourable and the crop has done almost everywhere.



Punjab (1·2 per cent of total area under linseed in British India).—The area sown is reported to be ?000 acres, as against 36,000 acres estimated at this date last year, and 32,000 acres the actual area that year.

Hyderabad reports 341,000 acres under linseed as compared with 321,000 acres last year, showing an increase of 6 per cent.

Charts.—The two charts below show (1) the second estimates of acreage, and (2) the final figures, for all the reporting provinces in respect of each crop.



* The area under linseed sown interspersed with other crops such as gram, barley, etc., is given in the final forecast published in June

Oilseeds crops in foreign countries.—From the latest information published by the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, it appears that the estimates of the linseed crop of 1917 in the United States of America are 1,808,000 acres and 21[illegible]000 tons, as compared with 1,604,000 acres and 386,000 tons last year. The estimates for the Canadian crop of linseed are 920,000 acres and 171,000 tons, as against 605,000 acres and 178,000 tons in the previous year.

(b) Two or three simple subjects will as a rule be given, from which a candidate may choose one only. He should endeavour to excel in good sense, not in quantity. The standard is roughly equivalent to Matriculation or School Final.

1. The examination is held annually at the Civil Engineering College, Sibpur, on the first Monday in June. The examination will be conducted, either at the College, or by an Accountant-General (including the Government Engineer of Railway Accounts) in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, Assam and Burma only. The examination will be ipso facto vitiated, if it be not held (begun and completed) on the dates fixed; but the officer who will conduct the examination may make his own arrangements with the candidates in regard to the place and hour of examination.

Candidates will not be examined in any of the Calcutta offices.

A candidate already in permanent Government employ* may be allowed to compete in the examination, even if he is more than 25 years of age, and may be appointed to an accountantship, if he passes it; but if he is not already in pensionable service, he will be eligible only for appointment to the non-pensionable establishment on State Railways.

* This term includes employment under Local Boards and foreign bodies, if such is pensionable by the British Government.

2. The candidate should apply to an Accountant-General not later than 30 days previous to the date fixed for the examination and obtain his consent to conduct the examination if examination at the College is not convenient. The application must bear the address of the candidate, must be accompanied by a fee of Rs. 10 and the following certificates and registration form duly filled in, and must be forwarded by him not direct to the Principal, but through the Accountant-General.

Certificates may be submitted in original, or true copies attested by an officer of the Engineer or Accounts Branch, but they will not be returned—

(1) A certificate of good character signed by applicant's immediate official superior, or by the instructor under whom he has been educated or by some other superior under whom he may have been brought up or employed or to whom he may be well known. (This certificate must have special reference to the two years immediately preceding the application.)

(2) A certificate of age, baptismal or of birth (not required, if the candidate is already in permanent Government employ).

(3) A certificate that the application is in the candidate's hand-writing.

NOTE A.—A candidate already in Government service should, in like manner, submit his application through his immediate official superior to an Accountant-General (including Government Examiner of Railway Accounts, qualified to hold the particular examination and should state whether he desires to be examined at the office of the Accountant-General concerned or at the College.

NOTE B.—The usual examination centres are (1) the Civil Engineering College, Sibpur, (2) Chittagong, (3) Ranchi, (4) The Bihar School of Engineering, Patna, (5) Rangoon, (6) Shillong, and (7) Simla for candidates in the Government of India offices, no others will be admitted at Simla.

(4) Registration statement containing the following information :—

(a) Name in full.

(b) Father's name.

(c) Nationality or class, i. e., European, Anglo-Indian or Indian, of candidate ; and, if Indian, caste or tribe.

(d) Date of birth.

(f) Present address.

(g) Examinations passed.

(h) Thumb mark of candidate, left hand, to be made in the presence of a responsible person who knows candidate.

(k) Signature and address of above-mentioned witness.

It will rest with the Accountant-General (including Government Examiner of Railway Accounts) to whom the candidate submits his application, to decide on a consideration of the certificates submitted, whether the candidate should be allowed to appear for the examination, or whether his application should be rejected. The Accountant-General or the other officers referred to, will then forward to the Principal, for registration, the names of the accepted candidates, together with their registration statements, which should be signed by the Accountant-General. The registration statement should be carefully preserved by the Principal. The names of these candidates should be entered in a statement showing their ages and their addresses, and also showing where each candidate is to be examined, whether at the College or at the office of the Accountant-General. This statement, together with the fees, should be transmitted to the Principal not later than 15 days after the dates fixed in paragraph 2 for the submission of applications of candidates.

3. Examination papers that are issued for examination need not be returned.

4. Each examination is complete in itself. A candidate who has failed in an examination and presents himself for examination on a subsequent occasion, must undergo the full examination and furnish fresh a fee and certificates.

5. If from any cause a candidate fails to appear for the Examination, the fee paid will not be refunded.

6. It must be distinctly understood that the passing of this examination does not give any claim to an appointment, and that, in making appointments, preference will be given to qualified persons who are already employed in the department.

7. Passed candidates should apply, not to the Principal of the College nor to the Comptroller-General, but direct to the Accountant-General or Government Examiner of Railway Accounts in the province or railway under whom they may desire to be employed.

8. The Civil Engineering College acts solely as an examining body in reference to admission to the 4th grade of Accountants, Public Works Department.

9. Candidates for the 4th grade Accountantship Examination, who are not Government servants and over 25 years of age, are allowed to appear at the examination of the Sibpur College centre only, but even if successful, they are debarred from employment in the service of Government, and their names will be excluded from the list of passed candidates which is furnished to the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

10. Candidates over 25 years of age not in Government employ should apply in writing to the Principal of the Civil Engineering College not later than 30 days previous to the examination ; the application to be accompanied by a Treasury receipt for Rs. 10, and the registration statement prescribed in rule 2 (4).

NOTE (1).—The question papers of previous years are not published separately. Those of the preceding year are printed in the Civil Engineering College Calendar— price, annas 12 and annas 3 postage, which must be prepaid.

NOTE (2).—Candidates for the examination are not provided with accommodation in the College barracks, but arrangements for their meals can be made on payment in advance of annas 4 per meal to the Assistant Superintendent of the Mess.

NOTE (3).—As for qualifications for admission to the examinations, candidates should refer the matter to the Accountant-General of their province.

His coolness in command and his own personal example of courage when repelling determined counter-attacks were beyond all praise. When the enemy's second counter-attack penetrated to within 10 yards of his position he organised bombers and himself threw bombs until the attack was broken.

No. 2468 Colour-Havildar Bhagwan Singh, Infantry, for conspicuous gallantry, endurance and devotion to duty in action on the 11th January 1917. He was in command of a platoon and did sterling work in assisting a British infantry regiment to hold on to the captured portion of the enemy's first line trenches. No. 3126 Naik Fakir Singh, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry and coolness in action on the 1st February 1917. It was chiefly due to his splendid personal example and his constant encouragement to his men that they kept cool and steady and succeeded in launching the pontoon in spite of heavy casualties. He was on the point of starting across when he received orders to come back.

Jemadar Hayat Muhammad, Punjabis, for conspicuous gallantry and initiative in action on the 24th February 1917. His platoon came under heavy flanking fire from some buildings and all except 12 became casualties. Seeing that the fire was hampering the whole of the

He has always set a fine example to his men and done excellent work.

Jemadar Jaman Sing Gurung, Gurkha Rifles, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 5th February 1917. Subadar Jodh Khan, Rifles, for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious service in action on the 22nd February and the 9th March 1917. He acted as Jemadar Adjutant in all the actions in which his regiment took part and always displayed great coolness and devotion to duty. On one occasion he displayed great courage in leading his men under heavy fire. He was of considerable assistance to his Company Commander in consolidating the position gained till finally wounded.

No. 3158 Rifleman Judbir Thapa, Gurkha Rifles, for conspicuous gallantry and ability in action on the 9th January 1917, in clearing out with bombs parties of the enemy who were holding up his company; this he did on two occasions taking several prisoners. Subadar Labh Singh, Infantry, for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in action on the 22nd February 1917. When the attacking troops on the front of his position were wavering he left his trench under heavy fire and fearlessly exposing himself successfully rallied them, led them back to the captured enemy trench and consolidated the position. He has always displayed the finest military qualities.

Subadar Lachman Singh, Infantry, for conspicuous gallantry, ability and leadership when commanding a platoon in action on the 9th January 1917. He succeeded in stopping and rallying men of another regiment who were momentarily withdrawing under heavy fire. He has proved himself an exceptional officer in two actions.

Jemadar Lalu Khattri, Gurkha Rifles, for conspicuous gallantry and resource in action at the forcing of a passage of a river on the 23rd February 1917. On landing and finding that his British officers had become casualties, he collected and rallied his men in his sector and with great courage and dash cleared a nullah 300 yards wide which was strongly held, thereby safeguarding our right flank.

No. 2423 Havildar Lalu Rajanna, Sappers and Miners, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 1st and 2nd January 1917. During night operations he was one of a party of 1 British officer and 14 men engaged under heavy fire in wiring an advanced picquet within 250 yards of the enemy's front line. Of this party three men were killed and three wounded, but they successfuly completed the wiring after 5 hours' work in the open and in bright moonlight. Their success was largely due to the fine example set by this Havildar.

No. 4170 Havildar Loganadun, Sappers and Miners, for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in action on the 26th January and 23rd February 1917. Whilst with a party ordered to block a trench he took command on the death of the Havildar and by his personal courage and example got the block completed under heavy fire. Again at the forcing of the passage of a river he rendered most gallant aid to the wounded. All through the operations he has behaved splendidly.

No. 615 Lance-Naik Mall Singh, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry and ability in action on the 1st February 1917. He remained in the front line trenches under heavy fire, and at night more than once went over the parapet into "No Man's Land" to superintend the bringing in of the wounded when he would have been perfectly justified in staying in the "Aid Post." His cheerful spirit in all weathers, his moral and gallant example, and his untiring energy have been a pattern of soldierly conduct on every occasion.

Jemadar Nand Singh, Punjabis, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 9th March 1917. When his platoon was under heavy fire and was suffering severe casualties he showed marked coolness in controlling his men, and by his fine example and personal courage succeeded in taking them absolutely unshaken to our most advanced fire position within close range of the enemy. This gallant officer was afterwards killed in action.

Subadar Narain Singh, Sikhs, for conspicuous gallantry in action on the 1st February 1917. blew his right arm off besides causing other injuries about his body, he volunteered to ride, thus liberating the four men who were carrying him on a stretcher to join the firing line. He suffered intense pain but by sticking to his horse for two miles under heavy fire, he enabled the squadron, which had been considerably delayed, to withdraw slowly to positions from which it could check the enemy's advance. He displayed exceptional courage and endurance. He was previously brought to notice for gallantry. He afterwards died of his wounds.

Jemadar Alam Khan, Sappers and Miners, for conspicuous gallantry, determination and coolness in action during the bridging operations when forcing the passage of a river on the 23rd February 1917. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

ACT No. X of 1918.

An Act to give additional powers to Courts to deal in certain cases with usurious loans of money or in kind.

WHEREAS it is expedient to give additional powers to Courts to deal in certain cases with usurious loans of money or in kind; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Usurious Loans Act, 1918.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan.

(3) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official gazette, direct that it shall not apply to any area, class of persons, or class of transactions which it may specify in its notification.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1) "Interest" means rate of interest and includes the return to be made over and above what was actually lent, whether the same is charged or sought to be recovered specifically by way of interest or otherwise.

(2) "Loan" means a loan whether of money or in kind, and includes any transaction which is, in the opinion of the Court, in substance a loan.

(3) "Suit to which this Act applies" means any suit,—

(a) for the recovery of a loan made after the commencement of this Act ; or

(b) for the enforcement of any security taken or any agreement, whether by way of settlement of account or otherwise, made, after the commencement of this Act in respect of any loan made either before or after the commencement of this Act.

Re-opening of transactions.

XXVIII of 1855.

3. (1) Notwithstanding anything in the Usury Laws Repeal Act, 1855, where, in any suit to which this Act applies, whether heard ex parte or otherwise, the Court has reason to believe,—

(a) that the interest is excessive ; and

(b) that the transaction was, as between the parties thereto, substantially unfair,

the Court may exercise all or any of the following powers, namely, may,—

(i) re-open the transaction, take an account between the parties, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest,

(ii) notwithstanding any agreement, purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation, re-open any account already taken between them and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest, and if anything has been paid or allowed in account in respect of such liability, order the creditor to repay any sum which it considers to be repayable in respect thereof ;

(iii) set aside either wholly or in part or revise or alter any security given or agreement made in respect of any loan, and if the creditor has parted with the security, order him to indemnify the debtor in such manner and to such extent as it may deem just :

Provided that in the exercise of these powers the Court shall not—

(i) re-open any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation which has been entered into by the parties or any persons from whom they claim at a date more than six years from the date of the transaction ;

(ii) do anything which affects any decree of a Court.

"Explanation—In the case of a suit brought on a series of transactions the expression

'the transaction' means, for the purposes of proviso (i), the first of such transactions."

(2) (a) In this section "excessive" means in excess of that which the Court deems to be reasonable having regard to the risk incurred as it appeared, or must be taken to have appeared, to the creditor at the date of the loan.

(b) In considering whether interest is excessive under this section, the Court shall take into account any amounts charged or paid, whether in money or in kind, for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonuses, premia, renewals or any other charges, and if compound interest is charged, the periods at which it is calculated, and the total advantage which may reasonably be taken to have been expected from the transaction.

(c) In considering the question of risk, the Court shall take into account the presence or absence of security and the value thereof, the financial condition of the debtor and the result of any previous transactions of the debtor, by way of loan, so far as the same were known, or must be taken to have been known, to the creditor.

(d) In considering whether a transaction was substantially unfair, the Court shall take into account all circumstances materially affecting the relations of the parties at the time of the loan or tending to show that the transaction was unfair, including the necessities or supposed necessities of the debtor at the time of the loan so far as the same were known, or must be taken to have been known, to the creditor.

Explanation.—Interest may of itself be sufficient evidence that a transaction was substantially unfair.

(3) This section shall apply to any suit whatever its form may be, if such suit is substantially one for the recovery of a loan or for the enforcement of any agreement or security in respect of a loan.

(4) Nothing in this section shall affect the rights of any transferee for value who satisfies the Court that the transfer to him was bonâ fide, and that he had at the time of such transfer no notice of any fact which would have entitled the debtor as against the lender to relief under this section.

For the purposes of this sub-section, the word 'notice' shall have the same meaning as is ascribed to it in section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. IV of 1882.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be construed as derogating from the existing powers or jurisdiction of any Court.

Insolvency proceedings.

4. On any application relating to the admission or amount of a proof of a loan in any insolvency proceedings, the Court may exercise the like powers as may be exercised under section 3 by a Court in a suit to which this Act applies.

A P. MUDDIMAN,
Secretary to the Government of India.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Saturday, the 9th March, 1918.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding and 58 Members, of whom 52 were Additional Members.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

SECOND STAGE.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I beg to open the second stage of the discussion on the Financial Statement."

RESOLUTION RE INCREASED EXPENDITURE FOR TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

11-5 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I beg to move the Resolution which stands in my name:

'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council an increase in the recurring appropriation from Imperial revenue of 30 lakhs towards primary education by another 30 lakhs for expenditure from the year 1918-19 onwards on the development of education in—

(a) Mechanical, electrical and sanitary engineering.

(b) Metallurgy.

(c) Mining.

(d) Forestry.

"Sir, the subject of this Resolution has been discussed to a large extent when the Public Services Commission Report resolutions were being considered on previous occasions, and yesterday also there was a general expression of opinion that the Government ought to grant larger sums towards the development of education in India. Particular stress has not been laid upon aid to the branches which I seek to see developed, and I therefore propose to make a very few brief remarks in connection with that aspect of the question. I do not think any very lengthy remarks are needed to commend the need of development or money therefor to the Council. The needs of the higher services, as well as the general economic condition of the country, require improvement in education in the branches which I have included in the Resolution. The Public Services Commissioners in their report have these observations on this point. On Agriculture they say :—

'Practical agricultural experience, however, is not demanded of candidates for appointment to the highest posts on the research and teaching sides of the department. In these branches, the chief requisite is a good science qualification supplemented by a term of post-graduate training in agricultural research. We accordingly recommend that facilities for such training be developed in India, and that the standard be brought up to the level of the best equipped agricultural institutions of Europe and America. The training classes should be established at Pusa, such additions being made to the staff of the institution as may be necessary for the purpose.'

"With regard to Forests this is what they say :—

'Direct recruitment should be made to the Imperial branch in India; with this object, a course of training up to the highest European standard should be instituted at Dehra Dun.'

"In regard to Geological survey the following statement is made :—

'A School of Geology should be developed in India which will rank with similar institutions in Great Britain. It is desirable that at one centre at least in India advanced study of this subject should be possible.'

"In regard to Mining the following recommendation is made :—

'Facilities for instruction in mining should be developed in India, and every effort should be made to utilise the services of Indian inspectors. One reason for urging this is, that there is a considerable Indian element among mining managers.'

"Then with regard to civil, mechanical, and electrical engineering and kindred branches they say generally :—

'With regard to the needs of the Public Works Department we are satisfied that the training now given in each of the four colleges is adequate to the needs of the higher branches of the public service.'

"But the evidence suggests improvements in mechanical and electrical and sanitary engineering.

"With regard to the locomotive and other departments they say that :—

'Arrangements should also be provided by which statutory natives of India with suitable educational qualifications would be able to serve as apprentice pupils in the shops and running sheds of the State railways, and so to reach the standard of professional training prescribed for direct recruitment.'

"With regard to Metallurgy, the report of the Committee on Technical Education, which sat more than 14 or 15 years ago, recommended a school for metal working, but nothing seems to have come of that recommendation. There is no doubt, therefore, that from the point of view of equipping educational institutions and workshops for the recruitment of the higher branches of the Indian Services, there is ample justification for the expenditure of the money I ask for. But, Sir, it may be said that the recommendations of the Public Services Commission are under consideration and that, therefore, it is a little premature to consider this subject. And with regard to the Industrial branch, it may be said perhaps that the Industrial Commission is sitting and will submit its report about April, and that, consequently, we might wait till that report is received. My answer to these two objections would be that, with regard to the Public Services Commission's Report, the matter has been already under investigation for about two years, and all that I say, is that some beginning should be made in the current year towards the solution of this problem. With regard to the Industrial Commission's Report, what I would say is, that the report will be received in June, and we are already late in making the necessary improvements to enable us to compete with foreign countries in the matter of industries. The recent commercial returns show how India has been swamped with foreign goods. So, apart from the question of recruitment for the Public Services, I would strongly urge upon the Government the need for the development of education in the branches which I have mentioned.

"Sanitary Engineering is one of the subjects which has to be taken up in India, and I hope that special attention will be paid to it.

"The recommendations of the Universities' Commission, with regard to the London University, show that they have there an Imperial College of Science and Technology in Metallurgy, Mining, and in Civil and Mechanical Engineering, and that it was hoped to secure professors with the highest qualifications at a salary of £1,000, and that £500 was sufficient for Readers. Therefore, the expenditure need not be very prohibitive in the matter of equipping Indian colleges, and besides, we already have in this country institutions in Agriculture, in Forestry, in Mining and in Mechanical, Civil and Electrical Engineering at Roorkee, Sibpur, Poona and Madras. All that is needed, is to further equip them with superior professorial staff and the necessary scientific appliances.

"So far as to the need and the cost. Then the question is, whether I am right in asking for a grant from the Imperial Revenues, especially in view of the possibility of the decentralisation of Provincial finance. My answer is, Sir. that these needs that I am asking to be served are chiefly for the higher Indian services, the Imperial services so to speak, and also for the general economic development of the country in which the whole of India is interested, towards equipping railways, larger irrigation works, and so on; and, consequently, there is justification for the appropriation of Imperial Revenues, towards the objects in respect of which support is sought. Of course, if any of these should fall within the exclusive category of Provincial finance, certainly, adjustments may be made, but I do not think that this step should be deferred, or can be deferred, until the other problem is fully solved.

"Then the question may be asked whether the grant can be utilised during the current year. If a brand new institution or brand new institutions had to be started, there would be some difficulty; but we have our own institutions which can be developed, and it ought not to be very difficult to import old men—men who are too old for fighting—into India for the purpose of filling the professorial appointments. So there may be no difficulty in getting the required professors; the equipment is there to a certain extent, and it ought not to be difficult, therefore, to utilise the grant during the year.

"Then the more important question would be whether there is any possibility of inducing the Government in the state of the Imperial finances this year to make any grant with regard to that subject. Sir, much has been said yesterday already. There has been a growth of nearly £26 millions in the general revenue since the year 1913-14 But have the general needs of the country been served by even a very, very small percentage of the excess? That is the first point I would like to put to the Council. The second is that there are certain increases and certain allotments suggested which might await happier times; under the discharge of debt, Indian bonds and Railway bonds, an expenditure of £3·5 millions is proposed, a loan of 2·7 millions is to be discharged, which might be included in the new loan. Then there is a debt of ·8 millions to the Gwalior State, but if His Highness the Maharaja of Scindia is not very particular on insisting upon repayment, it might be postponed. I am only suggesting possibilities. I will not not say any of them or all of them are particularly feasible.

"Then there is railway development for which another million is provided. I do not say that that should be curtailed; but it is just possible that all the money may not be expended during the current year. Then the elasticity is so great and has been proved to be so great that it ought not to be difficult to find £200,000 for the expenditure that I seek in connection with this department.

"Then between the acceptance of this by the Government and their making any provision, there would be a long time, and I hope, therefore, that the figures can be so adjusted or will be capable of being so adjusted on later information as to make it possible for the Government to accept this Resolution."

11-15 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I regard the Resolution with very considerable sympathy, but I shall presently explain why I am not able to accept it in this form. The Resolution says :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council an increase in the recurring appropriation from Imperial revenue of 30 lakhs towards primary education by another 30 lakhs for expenditure from the year 1918-19 onwards on the development of education in :—

(a) Mechanical, electrical and sanitary engineering,

(b) Metallurgy,

(c) Mining,

(d) Forestry,

"To put it briefly, on technical education, including Forestry and Agriculture. I must again refer to what I said yesterday in regard to our financial position. It is quite true that we budget for a surplus of about £2⅓ million. It may be—I hope it will be—that that surplus will prove to be actually exceeded in the year that lies before us. But, as I tried to emphasize in my speech on the 1st of March, we want all this money for the demands on our Ways and Means resources arising out of the war. I gave a sketch of these demands in my speech, and I had to say that, on the balance sheet I was able to strike, we had not been able to make specific provision for the Secretary of State's Council drawings which are so important for India's external trade; that we must meet these in some way or other, and that, therefore, even if we get windfalls, it is necessary to preserve them.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has made some rather ingenious remarks as to putting off paying our just dues, and hoping to save money on the provision for railway renewals, a very much needed provision for the helping of our much tried railways, which have done such splendid service. I am afraid I cannot accept those expedients as being practical and of financial validity.

"I must also repeat the arguments I used yesterday against further commitments in the shape of Provincial grants, when our future financial relations with the Provinces are under consideration, and it is proposed to give them larger resources to meet what is primarily Provincial expenditure.

"I gave some figures yesterday to show how the total expenditure on education had advanced as compared with 1913-14—the last year of peace. I showed that the coming budget provided 1 million pounds more expenditure for education than in that year; and as regards technical education I now cite some figures for the year 1916-17—the last for which details are available—as compared with the period five years previously, 1911-12. I find that comparing 1911-12 with 1916-17, the expenditure on engineering colleges and schools, engineering and surveying schools, technical and industrial schools, increased in all from about 24 lakhs to 29 lakhs. The former figure includes a Provincial outlay of 14 lakhs, the latter of 18 lakhs.

"Well, as I said yesterday, it is most undesirable to plunge into ill-considered schemes of outlay merely in order to impress the public, and this is specially the case in regard to technical education. We have got to be careful that what is spent is spent to the best advantage to meet actual, immediate or prospective demands. On this point I should like to quote some very apposite remarks made as regards engineers in paragraph 86 of the recent report of the Public Works Reorganization Committee. They say:—

'We are not convinced, however, that the annual output of engineers is less than the existing demand, and this view receives support from the fact that 46 per cent. of the upper subordinate posts in Bengal are filled by Bachelors of Engineering, that 60 per cent. of the products of the engineering class at Madras accept subordinate positions, and that posts as upper subordinates are guaranteed to and accepted by the students from Poona passing second and third in the Bachelor of Engineering examination. It is obviously uneconomical for Government to provide, at considerable expense, an engineering education of the highest standard for a man who will remain for the greater portion of his life in an inferior position and will never have the opportunity of exercising the knowledge gained during his college course.'

"Similar remarks were made in respect of electrical and mechanical engineers in the report of Colonel Atkinson and Mr. Dawson on Technical Institutions. I sincerely hope—and I yield to none in that hope—that our industrial development will hereafter justify provision for a much larger output of technically trained men; but we must not let the supply exceed the demand. If so, you will have a set of men for whom the State has provided training and who cannot be properly utilised. I may say, too, that we shall have guidance presently in this as in other matters from the report of the Industries Commission. My Hon'ble friend has referred among other things to Mining. I may remind the Council that Sir Thomas Holland, the President of the Industries Commission, is one of the greatest living authorities on mining—certainly the greatest living authority on mining in India; and that it is not likely the development of mining and the training of men in mining enterprise will have escaped his notice or his recommendations.

"Then, again, it would be most difficult to obtain the necessary teaching personnel, the reason being the paucity of men in the scientific cadre owing to the war, and the difficulty of recruiting fresh men. My Hon'ble friend says 'get an old batch of old men from Home.' Well, I do not think that would be feasible. In the first place, the old men, or a considerable portion of them, would succumb to the unaccustomed Indian climate; and, in the second place, there is nothing in which the practical outlook changes so much as in these technical subjects. We do not want old men who are passed their work. If you want to have good instruction, you must have it from men who are in the prime of life and who are thoroughly au fait with existing and future developments.

"Then, as regards agricultural education, a reference was recently made in my Hon'ble colleague Sir Claude Hill's Department to Local Governments as to the promotion of this. We have not received the replies yet. Here, again, it is undesirable to commit ourselves prematurely to schemes which might possibly be unreliable.

"For these reasons, Sir, I cannot accept the Resolution, but I am prepared to make an offer to my Hon'ble friend which, I hope, will meet his purpose, and which, I may say, is made with the full concurrence of my Hon'ble colleagues who administer the Departments in question. On the figures in the Financial Statement, for reasons already explained, I can make no further grant; but it may be, though I cannot yet speak with any knowledge on the subject, that the final budget figures will show a somewhat better position for 1918-19 than we have yet been able to assume in the Financial Statement. If that should prove to be the case, subject to the sanction of the Secretary of State which will be necessary, I shall be prepared to set aside such sum, not exceeding 30 lakhs, as may seem desirable, after consultation with my Hon'ble colleagues in the administrative departments concerned, for purposes of technical and agricultural education. This money would, at the outset, be regarded as an Imperial reserve. We cannot commit ourselves in any way at present as to its eventual application. It may be, as I have said,—I hope it will be,—that we shall get material guidance on this point ere long from the report of the Industries

Commission. It may be, too, that the replies to the references made to Provinces on the subject of agricultural education will help us to an early practical course in that matter. But for the present I can only give this strictly provisional undertaking. I regret I cannot commit myself to hand over such money as may be available to the Provinces. It may be that we shall be able to spend it to better advantage under the direct agency of the Government of India—especially as my Hon'ble friend observed that some of the objects concerned were rather all-India objects than Provincial objects.

"Now that is all I have to say. As I have explained, I cannot accept the Resolution as put before the Council, but I do make this conditional promise that, if our budget for 1918-19 shows a betterment as compared with the Financial Statement, I will give the fullest consideration to the putting aside of a sum, not exceeding 30 lakhs, for the general objects which my Hon'ble friend has referred to, and I hope that, in view of this explanation, he will not press the Resolution."

11-27 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Sir, I have only one or two observations to make with reference to the remarks which fell from the Hon'ble the Finance Minister. A passage was quoted from the report of the Public Works Department Reorganisation Committee that even at present the output of engineers is not small and, perhaps, exceeds the requirements and the fear was expressed that the supply might exceed the demand. May I say, Sir, that in the following paragraph the Commissioners state that, if their recommendations are accepted and the Indian agency be increased, the management being handed over to the local boards, there would be a demand for a larger number of highly qualified engineers and better arrangements will have to be made to enable the engineering colleges to increase the output. But the point really is not as to whether the output of engineers educated on the present lines is sufficiently large; the point is as to whether the highest type of teaching open to candidates in the rest of the world is open to students seeking education in these various branches in India; and it is for that higher teaching on which stress was laid by the Public Service Commissioners, it is for the development of that higher education that I have sought this money, and therefore, I think, Sir, that the money can very well be utilised at an early date.

"Then with regard to the second point that was put to me, that we must not unduly hasten the pace of making large advances to Provinces unless we had properly considered schemes, may I say that this subject of technical education has engaged the attention of Government for more than 20 years past, that the Public Services Commission's recommendations have been before them for the last two and a half years, and that there is a limit to the patience even of the Indian community. I hope, therefore, that there will be more driving power in the various administrations towards advancing the cause which we all of us have at heart. But in view of the very sympathetic remarks of the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer that the Government would consider the question and make provision this year if the finances would permit, I do not see that any useful purpose will be served by pressing the Resolution. It only remains for me to thank the Government for the assurances they have given. I beg to withdraw the Resolution if the Council would permit me to do so."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE GRANT OF 50 LAKHS OF RUPEES IN AID OF SANITATION.

11-31 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Sir, I beg to move the second Resolution which stands against my name, namely :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a grant 50 lakhs of rupees may be made in aid of sanitation, especially towards the supply of pure drinking water in rural areas.'

[9TH MARCH, 1918.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

"Here, again, almost every Member of the Council, official as well as non official, is convinced of the need for better sanitary equipment in order to improve the health of the Indian population. Recent events such as the increase of plague and increase in mortality from fevers, especially malaria, have rivetted, almost compelled, the attention of every thinking Indian to the subject and made him pause and consider as to whether he has been doing his duty in not putting sanitation above all other things and all other requirements. The figures available to me with regard to the last census are truly appalling. In several Provinces there has been a diminution in population, and as compared with the Native States, British India cannot boast of having done its duty in the matter, the growth of population having been smaller.

"In Bihar, there was an actual decrease of population of ·9 between 1891—1901 and in the decade 1901—11 the growth was only 1·7 per cent. In the Bombay Presdiency, it was —1·7 and +6 in the two decades. Bombay city itself was depopulated in the years 1891—01 4·1 per cent and the growth has been very small during the latter period. The Central Provinces again fared badly, but in the Punjab the tale is harrowing; there has been a decrease during the period 1901—11 of the population to the extent of —1 7 per cent. whereas there has been a general increase all over India of 5·5. In the United Provinces, also, the tale is equally sickening. Between 1891 and 1901 the growth was only 1·7, whereas between 1901 and 1911 there was an actual decrease of 1·1. A contemplation of these figures is sufficient to convince us that the mortality from the various preventible causes in India is greater than the mortality which ten such horrible wars like the great war now devastating Europe may be accountable for. The growth of population in British India has not been larger during the last decade than that in the Native States, and that is a state of things which requires looking into. So far as to the general need. With regard to the special requirement to which I have drawn attention, namely, the supply of pure drinking water in rural areas, I must say that I made pointed allusion to that special object with reference to the experience I have of my own Presidency. I have travelled far and wide in rural areas for various purposes, and nothing has impressed me so much as the absolute and imperative need of providing pure drinking water which can be done at a comparatively small expense, if only the resources of the Government and of local bodies can be organised on a proper footing. There are very many villages, where a lot of time and energy is spent by half the population (I say 'half' because the women-folk form half the population) in going long distances to get water which is but impure and absolutely inadequate in the hot season; and even where canals run by the side of villages the water is so impure as to cause mortality from fevers and bowel complaints, simply because local bodies have not been able to make proper arrangements for purifying the water. I, therefore, think that this is a subject which requires immediate attention; and there is the Public Works staff which is not engaged fully owing to the curtailment of Public Works expenditure. This is a matter which does not require any special technical skill, because there are hundreds of small overseers and contractors who will be willing to undertake the task, and labour will be forthcoming in abundance. I, therefore, think that the money can be utilised this year if only the grant is made, and I have worded my Resolution somewhat vaguely in order to meet possible objections. I said, 'recommends to the Council that the grant of 50 lakhs may be made in aid of sanitation.' This grant may be made either from the General Imperial Funds or by releasing Provincial funds to the extent of 50 lakhs, if the Hon'ble the Finance Member should say that there is to the credit of Provincial Governments a sum of £545 thousand which may perhaps be utilised for the purpose. I, however, submit that the Imperial grants, having regard to the immense growth in the revenue, ought to undertake a portion of the burden and contribute 50 lakhs of rupees immediately. That is what is due to this particular department of Governmental activity. But if the Government are unable, for the reasons which have been suggested yesterday, to make a grant from Imperial revenue, I hope they will be able to make a grant in the indirect fashion that I have alluded to, by allowing the Local Governments to spend to that extent from, or rather to draw upon, their Provincial reserves. The Financial Statement with reference to that point says that 'instructions have been issued in view of the war conditions to the Local Governments asking them to restrict drawings on their balances which include the unspent remainder of these special grants', and it further says 'any outlay thus postponed is merely deferred until normal times return'. I hope, Sir, that the grant may be made in one of the alternative forms I have proposed, and I think the subject requires the serious consideration of the Hon'ble the Finance Member and the Government of India."

11-39 A.M. The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya :—"I hope, Sir, the Hon'ble the Finance Member will see his way to accept the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend in one of the alternative forms suggested by him. I do not think the cause of sanitation requires any advocacy. Countless plague deaths eloquently call for more money being put forward in the direction of sanitation, and the need for pure drinking water is one of the most insistent needs which calls for attention. There is no doubt that a great deal of money can be most usefully spent in promoting public health and hygiene, and thereby preventing preventible mortality, and, as my friend Mr. Sarma has now suggested an alternative form, I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will see his way to accept the Resolution in one of the forms."

11-40 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—"Sir, I desire to support my Hon'ble friend on my left in this matter. I think the practical thing to do in this case would be for the Government of India to issue instructions to the Local Governments to free their balances for this purpose. They hold large balances for sanitary purposes, and these balances might be usefully employed for the purpose mentioned in this Resolution. Something more has to be done than that. You may give the money to various local bodies, but you cannot compel them to spend that money. I know, as a matter of fact, considerable grants were made to the District Boards out of the cesses which were placed at their disposal, but the District Boards were not able to spend them and so the grants lapsed. Therefore, Sir, it seems to me that apart from the essential need of money something more is required, and that something is the revision of the constitution of these District Boards. The Government of Bengal has taken a distinct and definite step in that direction by appointing by direct election in the case of five or six District Boards, Indian Chairmen for the purpose of carrying on their administration. The experiment has been tried for some months in the district from which my friend Maharaja Manindra Chandra Nandi comes—the district of Moorshedabad. The Chairman-elect is Rai Bahadur Baikuntha Nath Sen, aged 74, but he posesses the energy of a young man and he goes about from place to place in his motor car, visiting distant places, and he has infused a new life into the whole District Board administration. If we had in the District Boards of Bengal chairmen of that type elected by the people, I am sure this problem would be largely solved. Money is needed, and I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will be able to give it to us or, at any rate, to free the balances. But even more essential, I repeat, is the revision of the constitution of these local bodies. Liberalise the constitution, make it more popular, make it more responsible, make the Chairmen feel that they are responsible to the electorate, then and then only I think these balances will be utilised in a proper and more satisfactory manner than they are at present.

"As for drinking water, its value for the purposes of sanitation cannot be exaggerated. Wherever a supply of pure drinking water,—and I speak as a Chairman of one of the municipalties in Bengal,—wherever the supply of pure drinking water has been obtained, it has been attended with substantial benefit to the health of the people. I live in a village near the cantonment of Barrackpore. We have got a filter supply. We pay for it and we get it, and the result is a marvellous change for the better in the health of the people. The Government at present,—I am talking of those riparian municipalities,—is engaged upon a scheme for supplying pure water to the riparian municipalities on the left bank of Hooghly. The estimated cost of the scheme is about R36 lakhs. It is expected that Government will make a substantial contribution, and the municipalities are most willing to tax themselves for the purpose. Therefore, let us have the contribution by all means from the Government, and I hope and trust my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister will be in a position to give us an assurance to that effect. But the constitution of these local bodies must be liberalised, they must be popularised, they must be made responsible to the people, their official character must be banished. Then and then alone the cause of sanitation will be placed upon a satisfactory footing in Bengal and elsewhere."

11-45 A. M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"Sir, here again I have much sympathy with the objects of the Hon'ble Mover, and I may say that one of the most interesting and, to my mind, pleasant experiences of my Indian career, which now extends over more than a generation, is the change in the attitude of the people towards sanitation. When I was a young official I found, as a District Officer, that sanitary measures were absolutely unpopular. I believe now that as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Bannerjea has said, there has been a change in the outlook, and that people are becoming more and more willing to tax themselves for the purposes of sanitary improvement. But I think my friends will also agree that, although this is extremely desirable, it would be undesirable to force the pace too much and to let people think that they are being coerced into sanitation. I only throw that out by the way, because I repeat that I have the greatest pleasure in looking at the fact of the changed attitude of the ordinary mass of the people towards sanitation.

"Well, here again we have not been absolutely at a standstill as might be thought from some speeches yesterday. I think my friend the Mover will recognise, as being a master of figures himself, that we have advanced during the last few years very considerably. I have got the figures here for sanitation expenditure—and mind you this is only the Government sanitation expenditure; it does not include the expenditure of district boards and municipalities which are primarily concerned with this subject. In 1913-14, the expenditure was £432,000 ; we are budgetting this year for £715,000, that is an increase of 70 per cent. Then during those happy years in which peace prevailed and the Government of India were able to make grants to the provinces, a good deal was done in the direction of encouraging sanitation. I have some figures here furnished by the Education Department. In the last ten years the Government of India have given recurring grants which now total 85 lakhs a year for sanitation, and 439 lakhs in non-recurring grants ; the actual expenditure, altogether, in this way, recurring and non-recurring, for a period of ten years amounts to nearly 10 crores. That is quite apart from the 82 lakhs recurring expenditure given since 1913-14 to certain Local Governments to permit of an increase to the general resources of rural boards with the object that the boards should have a freer hand for sanitation expenditure. These sums are not merely for urban sanitation ; much has been made available for rural sanitation also : and in making the grant for 1913-14, the Education Department drew special attention to the needs of rural water supply.

"Coming now to the Resolution, I cannot accept the proposal that we should make a further grant from Imperial revenues of 50 lakhs for sanitation, I can only repeat what I have said before, that although we have a surplus, that surplus is needed, essentially needed, for our Ways and Means purposes in connection with the war, and we cannot dissipate it further. My Hon'ble friend the Mover, however, threw out an alternative suggestion. He said 'let the provinces over-draw from their balances'.

"Well, we have had to ask the provinces to conserve their balances for war purposes. If my Hon'ble friend turns to paragraphs 70 and 71 of my speech introducing the Financial Statement he will find that we have had to cut down the total balances of India, which include provincial balances, very much. We estimate that on the 31st March 1919 we shall not have much more than £11 million, our total balances for all India, whereas we regard the ordinary margin of safety as £12½ million.

"I may say that the Bengal Government came up to us this year and asked to be allowed to draw on their balances a bit, that is that their expenditure in the coming year should exceed their revenue for that year for certain purposes, and one of them was sanitation. The Bengal Government have embarked on a liberal sanitation programme, and we were satisfied with their reason and said that we would allow them to draw on their balance for this purpose. Other Local Governments have not made any similar request, and I must presume therefore that they are satisfied with the increased provision that they have been able to make out of current revenues. It is no use adding to your expenditure and simply provoking lapses, or rash and ill-considered outlay to avoid lapses.

"There is the question of establishment too. The Hon'ble Mover said that the Public Works establishment, not having so much to do as usual, could turn their attention to sanitary works. My Hon'ble friend Sir Claude Hill has just informed me that 33 per cent. of the Public Works establishment are absent on war work, serving in the field or otherwise, so that we have not got the establishments.

"But I will say this, that if in the course of the year any province should come up to us and ask for a further grant for sanitation to be made from the provincial balances, and can show that they can do this without disturbing our Ways and Means calculation by reason of the provincial revenues coming in better than at present anticipated—I say that if any province makes such a request, we shall receive it very sympathetically. I should be very loth indeed to stand in the way of any such request. Therefore, though I cannot accept the Resolution as it stands, I think my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma will not be able to accuse me of want of sympathy."

11-55 A. M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Sir, I recognise that the Government are aware of the serious nature of the problem, but to my mind it seems that they have not placed it in a proper perspective. They were deluded into thinking that the improvements that have been effected in recent years resulting in a large increase of expenditure, have been of such a character as to satisfy the average thinker on these questions. But what is the position ? There was an increase of expenditure from 60 lakhs to 130 lakhs ; has any very great benefit resulted ? has enough been done ? We find that in 1913 the deaths were 6,845,000, in 1914 there were 7,155,000 or an increase of 300,000, and in 1915 the figures were nearly the same, 7,142,000. Therefore the deaths in 1914 and 1915 are more than in 1913. . . . . . "

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" There is a larger population probably."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" And the growth of population is only half per cent. During the recent decade it has been 5·5, and the death-rate is much larger, 4 per cent."

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha :—" Are these deaths due to want of sanitation only ? "

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" They may be due to want of sufficient food also, which may result in feebler frames unable to resist the ravages of disease. I grant that. I, therefore, submit, Sir, that a larger advance should be made in the desired direction.

"Then with regard to the establishments needed, it is quite true that a number of Public Works officials have gone out, but I believe the curtailment of the expenditure proposed has even been greater; and apart from that, the local board staff undertakes general expenditure of the kind that I have referred to. But in view of the promise the Hon'ble the Finance Minister has made, that if any Local Government, should approach the Government of India for the sanction of larger expenditure, the request would be sympathetically considered, I think that we shall have to transfer our activities from here to the Local Governments, and then press the question if the present Finance Minister or his successor is obdurate. Under those conditions, therefore, and having regard to the reply that has been given, I do not see that there is very much use in pressing the Resolution further; having regard to war conditions, I feel that perhaps it would be improper to press the Government further in this matter. But before leaving the subject, may I ask inasmuch as for every improvement we have asked, this plea of want of funds has been brought forward, whether the Government of India cannot induce the Government of England to help us a little more in this direction by releasing our funds, because one point that I have never been able to understand is why, when 800 million pounds or more have been lent to the Allies and the Colonies, the Government cannot help us to find the funds for the purchases made here. That is a question on which perhaps the Finance Member on some occasion may help to make clear the position of the Government because there is a misunderstanding on the subject."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

THIRD STAGE.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"I beg, Sir, to introduce the third stage."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill opened the third stage of the discussion on, and introduced the following heads of, the Financial Statement for 1918-19:— 11-58 A. M.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Land Revenue.	Land Revenue.
Provincial Rates.	Provincial Rates.
Forest.	Forest.
Agriculture.	Agriculture.
Scientific and Miscellaneous Departments.	Scientific and Miscellaneous Departments.
Irrigation.	Famine Relief.
Civil Works.	Protective Works, Irrigation.
	Irrigation.
	Civil Works.
	Capital outlay on Irrigation.

"Sir, the discussion which has already taken place on the Financial Statement has been more expansive than has been the practice in past years, owing to the change in procedure, and I think I can therefore be rather more brief this year in dealing with the subjects that fall under my care than has been my practice in the past. There are, however, one or two important matters which, I think, the Council would wish me to enlarge upon.

"Dealing in a different order with the subjects from what has been my practice in the past, I would first of all propose to refer to, and inform the Council of, the advance that has been made in the matter of agricultural education since I addressed this Council last year. In accordance with the suggestion which was made to me last year by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya we held an agricultural educational conference during the last Simla Season in June, at which the whole subject of agricultural education was gone into and certain Resolutions passed which have since been referred to the Local Governments, and, so far as we know, they have met with very general approval. For present purposes I propose to refer to what is of the greatest immediate importance among these Resolutions, namely, that which was passed in June last recommending that agricultural middle schools be established in all the Provinces. That Resolution, among others, was also referred for the consideration of the Board of Agriculture which met last December in Poona, and which I attended, and was there debated at considerable length, with the result that the Board of Agriculture, while premising that in no circumstances was it desirable to do anything which would retard the progress of scientific investigation and demonstration which they regarded as of cardinal importance, endorsed the recommendation that agricultural middle schools should be established in every Province, wherever possible. They went further and drew up a provisional syllabus for such agricultural middle schools, which should form a very useful basis, I think, for adoption, with such modifications as may be necessary for different Provinces, in the schools which we now hope will come into being. The rapidity with which this scheme for inaugurating middle schools progresses must, of course partly depend on financial considerations, as well as on the enthusiasm of individual Local Governments. But I venture to hope, after what my Hon'ble friend Sir William Meyer has said to-day, that if circumstances prove favourable, and if it is possible for him to allot a certain additional grant, in pursuance of his reply to the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, towards technical education, I shall be able to hope for some of the crumbs from the rich man's table; and possibly be in a position to stimulate Local Governments, always supposing that stimulus is necessary to the establishment—the very early establishment—of certain of these schools to which I, personally, and the Department attach the very greatest importance.

"The proceedings of the Board of Agriculture dealt with very many matters of great importance, and I trust that Hon'ble Members who are interested in agricultural development—and it is a great pleasure to me to notice that their number appears to be growing rapidly—will have obtained and perused copies of the report of the proceedings. I only propose here to refer to one other item there discussed, and that is the subject of uneconomic holdings, which was perhaps the most important matter which came under consideration. The discussion was based primarily on a draft Bill of a rather skeleton character which the Hon'ble Mr. Keatinge, the Director of Agriculture in Bombay, was anxious, I believe, to introduce into the Bombay Legislative Council. The nature of that Bill was of a purely permissive character, the idea being to make it possible for a landlord who so wished, with the consent of all the descendants who might be interested in the disposition of his property, to get it declared that such property should not be further sub-divided, but should pass to his son or next-of-kin. Well, it is obvious that such a measure is one of very considerable difficulty and complexity, and that, since it impinges upon the Hindu law of inheritance, it is a very ticklish thing for Government to discuss. At the same time, its permissive character was, according to my thinking at the time, its best commendation to us for consideration. Generally speaking, the Board of Agriculture were in favour of some such measure being passed, but it was interesting to me to take note of the fact that the people, who at that Board's discussion thought that the measure was likely to prove inoperative and ought to be strengthened very much more, were two prominent Hindu gentlemen present at the Conference, who urged that this was a much too mild measure, and that Government ought to go very much further and peremptorily, if necessary, interfere with Hindu traditions. That was their view, but it was not the view taken by the Board of Agriculture. Of course, the question of whether legislation will be undertaken is still for discussion, but I mention the matter as being to me a very interesting phenomenon, that those who pressed for action in this behalf were the two prominent Hindu gentlemen who were present at the Conference.

"Then the next matter to which I should like to refer is the very important step we have taken in the appointment of a Committee to examine the question of developing the cultivation of long staple cotton. In recent years the world's demand for raw cotton, especially of the better varieties, has very largely outstripped the supply, and to us, in India, that is a matter of very great interest and importance; because it is, perhaps, not generally realised that 20 million acres of the cultivated area of India are at present under cotton, and that, therefore, the potentialities of India in regard to the development and cultivation of long staple cotton are enormous. The question how far that change which is involved in the substitution of long for short staple cotton is possible of achievement depends on very many factors—among others the question of how far we can arrange for marketing arrangements so as to ensure that the cultivator will always be able to obtain the proper premium value for the improved varieties of cotton; and that matter in India does present very considerable difficulty. It may interest the Council, however, to know that, in regard to that aspect of the case, we have arranged for telegraphic intimation to be at short intervals despatched upcountry from Bombay of ruling world prices for the different classes of cotton. That seems to be one step which may help the cultivator to obtain an adequate price for improved varieties. On this Long Staple Cotton Committee, which is still conducting its inquiries under the presidency of Mr. Mackenna, we have a representative of the British Cotton-growing Association and an ex-Chairman of the Bombay Millowners' Association, and I have the best of reasons for believing that they are tackling the subject from a broadminded standpoint, and that they have the interests not only of the manufacturers and the marketing agencies, but also of the cultivator very seriously at heart. It will further interest the Council, I think, to know that the Home Government have decided to appoint a permanent Cotton Committee, the main object of which will be to assist in developing the cotton resources of the whole Empire by keeping in touch with work in progress relating to the growing, handling, and marketing of cotton all over the world and by being a sort of clearing house of information in London. We have been asked to appoint on that Committee out here representatives of the Indian users of cotton and Indian merchants, and I hope, therefore, that the inauguration of this Committee will be a further factor in enabling us to progress in the direction of the development of long staple cotton growing in India.

"I had hoped to be able to tell the Council something about the results arrived at by Professor Maxwell Lefroy when he was out here investigating the silk industry, but, owing to Mr. Lefroy's absence from India, there has been some unavoidable delay in getting out his report, and I am unable to say anything on the subject to-day.

"The Indigo Cess Bill has already passed through this Council, and therefore I need not refer further to the subject of Indigo. But there is an important matter which I should like to mention, and that is the subject of cinchona cultivation. Hon'ble Members are probably aware that there is likely, within a very short period of time, to be a world shortage in the supply of that indispensable drug, quinine, and we have therefore during the past year taken steps to ascertain whether it is not possible for us in India so to increase the area under cultivation of cinchona as to make India, at all events, independent of this shortage in years to come, and possibly also to make India the supply agency for the rest of the Empire. For this purpose, Colonel Gage, Director of the Botanical Survey, was deputed and spent some months last year in investigating possible areas in Southern India, in Assam and in Burma, and it is a matter for congratulation to know that Colonel Gage has or thinks he has (and he is a very great expert on the subject) discovered a very suitable area in one of the districts in Burma for a very large extension of cinchona cultivation. We hope, therefore, that we may shortly be in a position very largely to extend the outturn of quinine.

"The next matter to which I should like to refer for a moment is the recruitment for the Agricultural Service. In connection with the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's Resolution the other day, I had occasion to offer certain remarks, and I do not wish to repeat what I then said; but I should like to observe that we have found it extraordinarily difficult to obtain recruits with the requisite qualifications for the scientific posts under the Agricultural Department. During the past year or so we have taken steps, as I explained, to effect promotions from the Provincial Service and to appoint Indians when we can find them duly qualified. But there has been a shortage, and great difficulty is found in filling some of the posts on the scientific side of the Agricultural Service. All I wish to do now—I am afraid at the cost of repetition—is to say that, while the Government of India are cordially at one with the aspiration of certain Members of this Council that the Indianisation of the Agricultural Service should proceed as rapidly as possible, they also adhere—and, I think, the Council will on the whole agree, wisely adhere—to the great principle that the best men for some years to come must be obtained irrespective of race or creed or anything else in order that no excuse might be given for levelling the complaint hereafter at the Government of India that they had sacrificed what was so vital to the interests of India in deference to a theory.

"I now turn to the activities of the Forest Department; and there again perhaps my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma will be surprised to know that as many as 65 officers of the Imperial branch were away on war duty. Like the Public Works Department, the Agricultural Department has been very seriously crippled in its activities owing to the war and to the zeal with which some forest officers applied for permission to go on work connected with the war. But we do fully realise the importance, more especially in this time of war, of developing, as far as possible, the unlimited forest resources of India. As I had occasion to tell my friend the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha last year, we have decided to create a cadre of forest engineers as one of the most important developments in the direction of forest exploitation, and I may mention that very great activity has, as a matter of fact, been displayed in many Provinces in exploiting forest produce for purposes of the war. The only other point in respect of staff that I need mention is that Madras, the Punjab and Bengal have put forward—and we have approved of—re-organisation schemes involving a total increase of 18 Imperial and 30 Provincial Service Officers, which will meet a long-felt want in those Provinces, as soon as recruits can be obtained. Then, in pursuance of the policy of developing Provincial autonomy in forest matters, we have had under consideration proposals for decentralising the training of forest rangers. At present that work is done in Dehra Dun, and we propose that it shall be done in future in three centres—at Dehra Dun for some of the Upper India provinces, at Coimbatore for some of the Southern and Central provinces, while a new school is to be opened at Dharwar in the Bombay Presidency.

"Turning now to the Public Works Department, it will have been seen from the Financial Statement that our productive irrigation systems, after meeting all charges for maintenance, repairs and interest on capital, have returned a net profit of 331 lakhs as against 315 lakhs, which I anticipated in this place last year. For the ensuing year we estimate a profit of 341 lakhs, the gradual increase being, as I forecasted last year, due to the completion of the Punjab Triple Canal project. The provision for major irrigation works is 70 lakhs, or 20 lakhs less than the provision allowed last year; while the grant for protective works chargeable to famine insurance has been reduced from 60 lakhs to 58. This steady reduction is due to our policy of undertaking no new works, unless it can be shown that they are either urgently required, or will be immediately remunerative, with the result that as each of the works now under construction is completed, the provision is slightly reduced. This, however, does not mean that we have no new project under consideration. The case is far otherwise. Though we are not able to undertake any new works at present, a comprehensive programme of new projects is being drawn up and will be introduced when financial conditions permit. As regards the future developments of some of the major irrigation works, I mentioned last year the Cauvery Reservoir in Madras. Owing to a Privy Council decision there has been some question as to how the water rights of zamindari lands work out, and how far the decision of the Privy Council in reference to those rights affects the probable results of the irrigation facilities provided by this project. The project has not yet been submitted to the Secretary of State pending the investigation of that question. Another great irrigation project in Madras is that for a reservoir in the Kistna; but we have not gone into that fully, because the Cauvery work is both more important and likely to be more beneficial to the country, and we propose to concentrate on that at first. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has referred to the project for a canal from the Sarda River which has quite recently been submitted worked out in detail by the United Provinces Government. This is the project to which I made reference in replying to the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, and it may be of interest if I mention that this scheme when completed will prabably be one of the largest irrigation works in India or in the world. The total length of the channels included in the project exceeds 5,000 miles, and some 9 millions acres will be commanded and 2 million acres irrigated annually. I need only refer very briefly to two other projects which are under preparation, namely, that for the Sukkur Barrage on the Indus in Sind and for the Bhakra dam on the Sutlej in the Punjab. The main object of the former is to convert the existing inundation canals in Sind into perennial canals, while that of the latter is to store the surplus water of the Sutlej during the rains with a view to its utilisation during the dry season. The provision of such storage reservoirs to prevent water running waste and to secure its utilisation during the dry season has become more and more one of the main objects upon which the Irrigation Department is concentrating. I had, the other day, in a visit to my old district of Ahmednagar, occasion to see the changes that have been effected by works of this character. When I was in Ahmednagar 25 years ago, the whole of the Pravara and Godavari valleys were practically deserts in which there were perhaps half a dozen wells which could be seen dotted about on a bare countryside, and where land could be purchased for Rs. 12 an acre. I revisited it the other day to find that I was able to motor for 60 or 70 miles along these valleys through a sea of sugar-cane, wheat and so forth, and ascertained that the land which used to be purchasable for Rs. 12 an acre was very difficult to obtain now for Rs. 400 an acre. That, in the space of 25 years, I think Hon'ble Members will agree with me, is a gratifying change.

"I now desire to mention certain matters with reference particularly to a remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul. I understood the Hon'ble Member to say the other day that there was a serious deterioration in the condition of the people of the country, at all events in parts of the Central Provinces. Well, I confess at once that I do not know whether what Hon'ble Members have noticed in this regard is directly contrary to my own impression when travelling about India and contrasting the condition of the people as it appeared 25 years ago with what it is now. My experience is that one sees on every hand better houses, more wells, better comforts, better implements used by agriculturists in the rural tracts, and on the whole, if I may say so, a greater degree of prosperity. That, however, is an arguable proposition, and I do not wish to lay undue stress upon it. But I do wish to lay stress on, and draw the attention of this Council to certain extracts from, Mr. Mackenna's Report on the progress of agriculture in India which deal with facts which are incontrovertible and which have a great bearing on the correctness of an estimate which concludes that the condition of the people is deteriorating. I would first of all, if I may ask the indulgence of the Council, read an extract from page 15 :—

'The agricultural departments have been successful in demonstrating the improved agriculture of one tract to the backward cultivators of another, e g., the methods of transplanting rice, drilling and intercultivating cotton and other crops, green-manuring, the Poona method of making gur, etc., and it is in these directions that Deputy Directors are doing the most useful work.'

[Sir Claude Hill.] [9TH MARCH, 1918.]

Mr. Mackenna then goes on to give an extract from a report regarding certain operations in the Central Provinces at the Chandkhuri Farm; the Chandkhuri Farm having been established in an area hitherto entirely waste which the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul will recognise by the name of bhata lands :—

'These bhata lands lie higher than the more productive arable lands and are for the most part regarded as uncultivable; a very small proportion of them are poorly cultivated at long intervals to produce wretched crops of the lesser millets.........The original idea was to try growing green fodder crops under irrigation in order to substitute stall-feeding of cattle for the starvation-ration hitherto obtained by grazing......This has been successfully achieved; but Mr. Clouston has not been satisfied with that success. He has gone on to try the cultivation of bhata lands, aided by manure and irrigation, with ground-nut, cotton and cane, and has made a startling success with all three crops.......The cost of cultivation is very little, and the nuts were found to be much larger than those grown in stiff black soil, hitherto regarded as most suitable for this crop.'

Similar good results were achieved in the case of cotton and so on. Water is available, and it only remains to encourage cultivation, and there are hundreds of thousands of acres which will be available to come under cultivation out of these barren lands.

"I will now give another quotation :—

'The cultivation of a short staple variety, roseum, in Berar has brought an additional crore of rupees to the cultivators. The introduction of Company No. 3, a selection from Karunganni cotton, which is an indigenous long-stapled variety, and Cambodia cotton, have produced markedly beneficial results. Similarly, in the Punjab, the cultivation of Mr. Milne's selection, 4 F. American cotton, is extending by leaps and bounds and this year it is expected to bring an additional 45 lakhs to the cultivators.'

In the canal colonies of the Punjab the department is pushing a selected wheat regarding which Mr. Mackenna says :—

'It is estimated that the growers of this wheat got an additional income of at least 2 lakhs of rupees as the result of the higher yield and the premium paid over the ordinary price of wheat.'

In regard to the Central Provinces again, I may draw Mr. Shukul's attention to the increased profits, from growing those wheats, which have been definitely established, at 'from Rs. 5 to Rs. 10 an acre,' and as there are 200,000 acres this brings an additional 10 or 20 lakhs a year to the cultivator. In Bengal, the selection of an improved type of rice 'Indrasail' isolated by Mr. Hector has also resulted in very great profits to the cultivators and in the year under report seed sufficient to sow over 20,000 acres was distributed through panchayets, while this year it is hoped to distribute enough for nearly 12 lakhs of acres. In regard to cotton in Madras in the 'Tinnevellies' tract, it is stated on page 25:

'The selected strains Company No. 2 and No. 3 have been found to combine both good yield per acre and staple, and the Director of Agriculture calculates that the ryot who grew Company No. 3 cotton made a profit of some Rs. 28 per acre over those who grew ordinary Tinnies.'

"I hope I have not wearied the Council with the recital from this book of the progress of agriculture in India, but I felt that it was necessary to say something, however little, to show that, so far as the Agricultural Department are concerned, the claim to progress in the direction of benefiting the cultivator is not lacking in evidence.

"There is only one other reference I should like to make to what has fallen in the course of the debate from Hon'ble Members; and that is to the remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda in reference to New Delhi, that its construction should be temporarily stopped. I may best refer him to the answer given by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer to Mr. Basu last year. My Hon'ble Colleague said :

'As I explained the other day, we are just spending enough to keep things going to keep the scheme alive. That scheme is one which was brought into effect by the fiat of the King-Emperor, and it is the deliberate policy of the Government of India and of His Majesty's Government at Home. My friend was not in the Council two or three years ago; but if he had been, he would have had a striking exhibition of the way in which Hon'ble Members from other parts of India endorsed the project of the New City.'

"As was the case last year, so is it this year, that the provision for New Delhi is merely sufficient to prevent waste. I have already in answer to a question by another Hon'ble Member explained how largely the staff has been reduced and the rate of construction is merely such as to keep the scheme alive."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I ask for information whether with regard to the 18 Imperial Forest officers, the recruitment is to be thrown open to all without regard to their race and only with a view to efficiency?" 12-28 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"I am afraid I did not quite understand the point of the Hon'ble Member's question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"If I am not wrong, I remember having heard that sanction has been given for 18 additional Imperial officers in the Forest Department. I ask as to whether these officers will be recruited from Europeans as well as Indians irrespective of their caste, having regard only to their efficiency."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"The Hon'ble Member is quite correct. The recruitment will be made, under the orders and regulations at present obtaining at Home, through the Secretary of State in the ordinary way. Recruitment is not closed to anybody." 12-29 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair introduced the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19:— 12-30 P.M.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Sanitation.	Sanitation.

"Sir, I beg to introduce the Education and Sanitation heads of the Financial Statement. Hon'ble Members will find at page 62 of the Financial Statement that the expenditure on Education continues to grow, and will next year considerably exceed all previous records. When I took over my present office in 1915, we were spending about 4½ crores of rupees a year. Last year we spent 5 crores, and next year we hope to spend over 6 crores. The number of scholars which seven years ago was barely 6½ million was over 7 millions in 1916-17, and I trust that it will be found to exceed 8 millions in the present year, and that we shall make a further advance next year. This is not as great a progress as we might wish to see, but none the less it is a very distinct advance and one which we cannot ignore. The additional expenditure expected in 1918-19 is due partly to the new Imperial grant announced by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer but also and to a still larger degree to a policy of educational expansion which has been adopted by all the Local Governments without exception. Our own grant is, as the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer stated, one of 30 lakhs, and it follows on a grant of 30 lakhs given last year for the training and pay of teachers. The grant for 1918-19 is like its predecessor intended to meet the needs of primary education. It will be available not merely for schools themselves, whether these schools are for boys or girls, but also for Inspectors and for the training and pay of teachers as far as primary schools are concerned. It is generally recognised that, of the various pressing needs of education in this country, that of primary education is the most pressing, and we should have been glad to have been able to present to this Council some scheme which will provide in advance for the progressive extension of primary education in India, but as His Excellency has explained in his speech at the opening of this Session, the changes in our financial system which will be inaugurated as part of the contemplated reforms render it impossible for us at this stage

to formulate any programme of this kind in advance. In the meantime we have, as the Council are aware, given an opening to the introduction in several provinces of schemes by which local bodies can enforce in their areas a system of compulsory education, and the provincial budget shows for the first time a provision for meeting the expense of introduction of compulsory education. Hon'ble Members will find it at page 64 of the Statement. We have not ourselves adopted compulsion as part of our present programme, but we are anxious to see primary education increase by whatever means this increase may be obtained, and, on these grounds, we have included in our budget the new recurring grants of Rs. 30 lakhs for primary education. Of this sum, we are keeping one lakh in hand, and of the rest Madras would get 5½ lakhs; Bombay 4; Bengal 5½; United Provinces 4½; Punjab 2; Burma 1½; Bihar and Orissa 3; Central Provinces 1½, and Assam 1 lakh. A further half a lakh will be distributed as follows :—

	Rs.
North-West Frontier Province	32,000
Ajmer	8,000
Baluchistan	5,000 and
Residency Areas	3,000

These grants are intended for the extension of primary schools on the present voluntary footing, but they will, of course, be available also for granting assistance in areas where compulsory education is being introduced.

"Turning to Sanitation or, as I should prefer to call it, Public Health, we contemplate here also a considerable increase in our expenditure. We spent Rs. 78 lakhs in 1916-17; we shall be spending 87 lakhs this year, and we hope to spend 107 lakhs next year. Most of the provinces have budgetted for an increase of expenditure and the increase contemplated in Bombay and Bengal is considerable. We have also provided for an increase of expenditure from the two items from which we ourselves make grants, namely, the sanitary grant and the grant for the Indian Research Fund Association. The reserve at our disposal from the sanitary grant was Rs. 6 lakhs. Of this sum, we have given one lakh towards the drainage of Peshawar, one lakh for the improvement of the Badrinath Kidernath pilgrim route, Rs. 75,000 for the relief of congestion in Ahmedabad and Poona, Rs. 80,000 for improvement at Amritsar and for anti-plague measures at Rawalpindi, Rs. 60,000 for the relief of the congested town areas in the Central Provinces, and Rs. 90,000 for various sanitary improvements in Delhi. Next year we hope to have some 8 lakhs at our disposal, and some portion at any rate of that sum will be utilised in assisting Local Governments to provide for the improvement of the health conditions attending pilgrimages. For our other main source of expenditure—the Indian Research Fund Association—we should ordinarily have had 7½ lakhs available, but our Bacteriological Department is depleted owing to the war, and we temporarily surrendered 3½ lakhs out of this sum. Of the remaining 4 lakhs, we have put aside 1 lakh for the Hygiene Institute which will be an important branch of the School of Tropical Medicine at Calcutta, designed to give medical post-graduates an up-to-date training in public health such as is not at present available in India. We have also devoted Rs. 26,000 to improvements to the Central Research Institute at Kasauli and Rs. 16,000 to experiments in the improvement of vital statistics in Madras. The rest of our money has been allotted mainly to special lines of investigation, such as plague, diabetes, flies and hookworm disease. Hon'ble Members will perhaps remember the account which Sir Pardey Lukis gave us in this Council last year of the widespread debility occasioned by this last-named disease among the coolie class, and I am glad to say that during the present year a sum considerably exceeding half a lakh has been spent on the important inquiries into this hookworm disease which have been carried out by Lieutenant-Colonel Clayton Lane in Bengal and by Dr. Mhasker in Madras. We propose during the present year to continue our liberal support of the chief investigations which have been carried on during the present year, and if opportunity offers to extend further the scope of these forms of research. Our inquiries are, as I have stated, much circumscribed by the absence of many of the officers of the Bacteriological Department at the front, and at the present moment out of a research staff of 31 officers 18 are on Military duty. There are at this time 17 officers engaged in laboratories or on special inquiries, of whom 9 are Indians: and in addition to these, Indian assistants have been associated in the investigations now under the conduct of European officers. We are in this way forming the nucleus of a body of indigenous experts who will, I hope, constitute a source of great future strength to the well-being of this country.

"I have made an allusion to the late Sir Pardey Lukis, and I wish before sitting down to remind the Council of the debt which we owe to him in the development of bacteriological research in India. Hon'ble Members are aware of his great services in other lines, but I think I am right in saying that he looked on this particular branch of his activities as representing in a special way his own contribution to the welfare of India. He was very closely associated with the inception of the Research Fund Association, and it was due to his constant efforts that the Fund was utilised, as it has been, for the investigation of the more prominent questions affecting public health in this country. In continuing the work on the lines which he inaugurated, we shall maintain it in the way he would best have wished to the memory of his services to India."

12-39 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Sharp :—"Sir, it is usual at this stage to lay on the table a short narrative dealing with the educational activities which took place during the last completed financial year. I think I explained last March that during this year the Quinquennial Review of Education would be published and that, therefore, no short narrative would be laid on the table. Instead, I beg to lay on the table the document generally known as 'Salient Features', which gives the more important figures of education in India and also in the individual provinces."

The Council then adjourned till Tuesday, the 12th March, at 11 o'clock.

The 18th March, 1918.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61).

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Tuesday, the 12th March, 1918.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding, and 57 Members, of whom 52 were Additional Members.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

Appointment of an Indian as Chief Justice.

1. "Has any Indian ever been appointed a permanent Chief Justice in any of the High Courts or Chief Courts in India? If not, will Government be pleased to state if there is any statutory bar to such an appointment?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"Such records as the Government of India possess do not show that an Indian has been appointed substantively as Chief Justice in any of the High Courts or Chief Courts of India. There is of course no statutory bar to such an appointment; and, as the Hon'ble Member is no doubt aware, Indians have, from time to time, been selected to officiate as Chief Justice or Chief Judge."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

Exemption from income-tax of Premiums taken by Landlords in B[illegible]

2. "(a) Are the Government of India aware that the Government of Bengal have exempted from income-tax all premiums taken by landlords for settlements of waste or abandoned lands with tenants?

(b) Is it a fact that fees levied for recognition of a transfer of agricultural land from one tenant to another are liable to income-tax?

(c) Is the same principle followed in the matter of income-tax administration by the other Provincial Governments?

[Sir William Meyer; Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri Khan Bahadur.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer replied :—

" (a) The Government of Bengal have ruled that a premium taken by a landlord for granting settlement of waste or abandoned lands with a tenant is similar to salami taken on the creation of a patni or other tenure, and is therefore not liable to assessment under the provisions of Act II of 1886, being either the price paid to the proprietor for a portion of his rights, or an advance payment of rent.

(b) Fees levied for the recognition of a transfer of land from one tenant to another are not agricultural income for the purposes of the Income-tax Act, 1886, and are therefore liable to income-tax.

(c) and (d) The Government of India have no information as to the practice followed in Provinces other than Bengal."

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Retirement of Government Servants.

3. " (a) With reference to the recent amendment of Article 459 of the Civil Service Regulations, regarding retirement of Government servants who have reached the age of 55 years, will Government be pleased to state the reasons which have led them to distinguish, for the first time, between ministerial officers and officers other than ministerial ?

(b) In making the amendment, did Government take into consideration—

(i) the nature of the work which ministerial officers have to perform throughout the year ;

(ii) their poor scale of salary ;

(iii) the question whether the operation of the new rules is likely to bring about a serious block in promotion, and

(iv) the possible practical effects of a sudden permanent change in the conditions of service and prospects of such officers ?

(c) Were Local Governments consulted in the matter of the exception made in the case of ministerial officers, and did they accept the Article, as amended, in its application to ministerial officers ?

(d) Is it the intention that, in all cases where a ministerial officer is considered efficient, he should be retained in the service of Government until he attains the age of 60, and the Head of the office will have no power to retire him at his discretion if he considers that course necessary for reasons and considerations other than inefficiency ?

(e) Do Government propose to consider proposals for the increase of salary and the introduction of a time-scale of pay of ministerial officers on the ground that a block in promotion is likely to result from the adoption of the new rules ? "

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer replied :—

" (a) A distinction has been made between ministerial and other officers because the duties of the former can usually be discharged with efficiency by an officer whose age exceeds fifty-five.

(b) (i) The answer is in the affirmative.

(ii) The Government of India do not consider that the scale of salaries affects the question how and when officers should be compelled to retire.

(iii) No change in substance has been made in the rules so far as ministerial officers are concerned. Article 459, as it stood before the recent amendments, made it clear that really efficient officers should not ordinarily be required to retire on attaining the age of 55. The same criterion is applied to ministerial officers under the new rules.

(iv) The Government of India are unable to admit that any substantial change has been made in the conditions of service and prospects of ministerial officers;

(c) When Local Governments were consulted the reference was made in general terms. The distinction between ministerial and other officers was specifically proposed by one Local Government.

(d) The authority having power to fill the appointment (if vacant) has power to compel a ministerial officer to retire for reasons other than inefficiency. The use of the word 'ordinarily' in clause (a) of the present Article 459 covers this point.

(e) The Government do not propose to consider an increase of salaries and the introduction of a time-scale of pay with reference to the ground stated by the Hon'ble Member, since, as above indicated, there has been no substantial change in retirement conditions and promotion prospects."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Percentage of Alcohol in country spirits.

4. " Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether the percentage of alcohol in country spirits and fermented liquor varies in different parts of the country, and, if so, in what proportion;

(b) the actual percentage of alcohol present (i) in each kind of country liquor, (ii) in fermented liquor such as toddy or pachwai, and (iii) in country beer; and

(c) the retail selling prices in the principal cities of India of (i) country spirits, (ii) toddy, and (iii) beer, as well as of each kind of foreign liquor ? "

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

" The information for which the Hon'ble Member asks in parts (a) and (b) of his question will be found, so far as it is available, in Major Bedford's Report on alcoholic liquors in India, a copy of which I will be pleased to lend the Hon'ble Member if he so wishes.

A statement of the retail selling prices of country spirits and toddy in the principal cities of India will be laid on the table when the information has been collected. It is impossible to give this information in regard to beer and foreign liquors as they are sold in a variety of qualities, at prices which vary accordingly."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Indian and Anglo-Indian Journals required by Government.

5. " Will Government be pleased to state the names and the number of copies of the Indian and Anglo-Indian newspapers, journals, and other periodicals which are required for departmental purposes ? "

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"A statement* is laid upon the table embodying the information asked for by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Consumption of Toddy, Pachwai and other Liquors.

6. " Will Government be pleased to state for each of the last five years (1913 to 1917), Province by Province—

(a) the total quantity, as far as available, of (i) toddy, (ii) pachwai, (iii) other fermented liquor, and (iv) beer consumed in India;

(b) the total quantity of each kind of foreign liquor imported into India;

(c) the total quantity of all kinds of liquor exported from India ? "

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[Sir George Barnes; Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur; Sir William Vincent; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"The complete figures desired by the Hon'ble Member cannot be given, but statements* are laid upon the table giving all the information that is available."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked:—

Securities deposited under the Press Act, 1910.

7. "Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement for each of the last three years (1915, 1916 and 1917), showing Province by Province—

(a) the names of Urdu and Anglo-Urdu newspapers, journals, and other periodicals (i) from which securities have been demanded under the Press Act of 1910, and (ii) the securities of which have been forfeited and the Presses confiscated to the State under the same Act;

(b) the number of such papers as have stopped publication;

(c) the number of such papers as have been exempted from the payment of deposits under the Act, as well as the number of existing papers to which the Press Act has not been applied?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"The information asked for is being collected from Local Governments and Administrations and, when it is complete, a statement will be laid on the table."

RESOLUTION RE INCREASE OF THE EDUCATION GRANT FOR THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

11-12 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Sir, the Resolution which I beg to move is that:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the sum provided in the budget under the head of education for the Central Provinces be increased by rupees 4 lakhs for the establishing of a University at Nagpur.'

"I do not think any apology will be needed from me, when I venture to make this modest demand of 4 lakhs of rupees for the establishment of a University at Nagpur in the Central Provinces, especially at this time, when all the resources of the State are being strained for the successful prosecution of the war. Sir, the matter is as important as it is urgent and deserves a most sympathetic consideration at the hands of the Government and this Council. We, the Indians, are already grateful to Government for the striking proof that has already been given of the high regard in which the Government holds the cause of University education in this country, by the promptitude with which action has been taken to establish the two Universities at Benares and Patna, during the pendency of the war. The University education is the highest blessing that the British rule has conferred upon the people of India, and the people are now wide awake to the benefits of higher education and are eager to have it as easily and as cheaply as they possibly could. Sir, the signs of a general intellectual awakening are visible all round, which is a hopeful augury of the bright future that awaits India. The people of the Central Provinces also are desirous of joining hands with their fellow brethren of the other sister Provinces and keeping abreast with them in the march of progress that they are making. We belonging to the Central Provinces and Berar recognize as clearly as others that it is University, a University alone that 'provides the best teaching over the entire field of knowledge of which its own resources and the progress of science may admit; that offers this teaching to the widest range of students and moulds and shapes them not merely by the training of intellect, but by the discipline of spirit so that wherever they go, they may be worthy citizens or worthy servants of the State'. It was the noble desire of bringing 'through the natives of India the vast moral and material blessings which flow from the diffusion of knowledge', that impelled the Court of Directors of the East India Company 60 years ago to establish Universities in this country. Of all the older Provinces in India, ours is the only 'ill-fated' Province, which has not been as yet blessed with its own University. The Government, we are glad, has already recognized the necessity of reducing the unwieldy jurisdiction of the present affiliating Universities, by means of establishing in different Provinces new Universities of a kindred type and at the same time of founding at suitable centres, in different typical areas, Universities of a type, congruous with the prevailing conditions of the present times. Sir, it will be by this means only, and not otherwise, that it will be possible for the Government to give full effect to the pious wish of our beloved Sovereign that a net work of colleges and schools be one day spread all over this land. It is in pursuance of this already accepted policy of the Government of India, that I, on behalf of the people of the Central Provinces, request the Government that over and above the sum provided in the Financial Statement for expenditure under education, a sum of 4 lakhs should be allotted for the establishment of a University at Nagpur.

"Sir, a short history of the attitude of the Government towards the establishment of a separate University for the Central Provinces may not be out of place here. In this connection, I may be permitted to inform the Council at once that the question is a very old one. Hopes for the establishment of a University at Nagpur were held out to us, when the idea of some of the Universities which have but lately come into existence was not even conceived. The contemplated University for the Central Provinces was referred to in the Report of the Education Commission of 1882. The Universities Commission of 1902 also adverted to it in paragraph 29 of their Report and bore unequivocal testimony to the fact that 'the proposal to create a new University at Nagpur had received both official and non-official support.' Later on, the Government of India in their Resolution dated the 21st February 1913 while declaring the educational policy assured, that with a view to satisfy the aspirations of the people they contemplated the establishment of a University at Rangoon, Patna and Nagpur. Not long after that, the Central Provinces Government by their Resolution No. 682, dated the 8th July 1914, appointed a strong Committee consisting of officials and non-officials to consider a scheme for the creation of the University at Nagpur. The Committee, Sir, gave a very close and thoughtful consideration, and after seven months' labour produced an elaborate report, embodying a detailed scheme for the constitution of the proposed University. The Local Government invited public criticism on the said Report and gave the people an opportunity to express their own views on the subject. The Report was discussed threadbare at the meetings of the 4th Provincial Conference, Central Provinces and Berar, held at Nagpur in the year 1915 at which I have had the honour to preside, and a deputation was arranged to wait upon the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner and place before his Honour the views of the Conference. This was done and a favourable and a sympathetic reply was received from the Government. Since then, the people have waited and waited very long and waited in vain. The people are becoming anxious, disappointed and almost hopeless, and yet the scheme has been hanging fire. For so many years past, and this in the face of repeated assurance from the Government and in spite of the sympathetic attitude which they have maintained towards this question all along.

"The Hon'ble Mr. M. R. Dixit, Bar.-at-Law, who is also Secretary of the Graduates' Association, Central Provinces and Berar, interpellated the Local Government on the subject on March 18, 1916, and received the following reply :—

'(a) The Government is not aware that the proposal for the Dacca and Patna Universities and for a University for Burma, have reached the advanced stage which is mentioned in part (a) of the question.

[Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

(b) and (c) With regard to parts (b) and (c) of the question, I would refer the Hon'ble Member to the reply which was given by the Chief Commissioner to the deputation which waited on him in January to present the resolution of the Provincial Conference. The reply was published in the press. The Chief Commissioner is aware of the interest that is taken in the subject in the Province, that in view of the voluminous criticism received and of the necessity at a time like the present for putting forward proposals which should be as practicable as possible, he must wait the detailed report on the scheme which is to be furnished by the permanent Director of Public Instruction; until the report has been received and considered, it is impossible to make a further statement on the subject.'

"Sir, I do not know of any statement having been made by the Local Government as yet although it is nearly two years that have passed since then. In compliance with the wishes of my constituents I asked the Government on 19th September 1916, if they had received any definite proposal regarding the establishment of the University at Nagpur from the Local Government, and the reply received, as the Council must be aware, was in the negative. I repeated my question on the 12th September last and further asked the Government as to when a Bill for the establishment of a University at Nagpur was likely to be introduced in the Council. My friend on the opposite, the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education, then replied to the effect that 'proposals have been received from the Local Government for the establishment of a University for the Central Provinces and are now under consideration. It is therefore undesirable to publish the proposals at present and impossible to give a definite reply to the question when a Bill for the establishment of the contemplated University will be introduced.' Very nearly six months have elapsed since then and nothing is known as to what has been the fate of these proposals. It was expected that provisions for the establishment of the proposed University would be made in the ensuing year's budget; but that has not been done, even in the face of the bountiful surpluses at our disposal. Sir, this means another year's delay and the Council may take it from me that this indefinite postponement of such an important measure pertaining to the immediate welfare of the Province from time to time, is having a very discouraging effect upon the minds of the people which should not be ignored. Sir, there is ample material in the Province for the growth of the University atmosphere. At present there are seven colleges in the whole Province including the newly sanctioned college for the Berar at Amraoti. Further, there is an agricultural college, a medical school for the training of the Sub-Assistant Surgeons and an engineering school, all located at Nagpur. The latter two institutions, however, have been established but lately, and it is expected that these will soon be raised to the status of a college.

"As regards the progress of education, the number of students in receipt of collegiate education is increasing by leaps and bounds. The Central Provinces University Committee observed in their Report that 'the existing colleges contain about 1,100 students exclusive of undergraduates in the Training College. We, therefore, provide for an increase of approximately 850 students. In the quinquennium ending in 1912, the number of pupils in the High School class increased by over 50 per cent. in the number of students.' In the matter of secondary education as well the Province has made rapid strides during the preceding few years. The Hon'ble Mr. A. Mayhew, the Director of Public Instruction, Central Provinces, while speaking on this subject, stated in the Local Legislative Council on the 4th September 1915, that 'last year six High Schools were opened, three under private agency and three under Government. A large number of educational sections were opened in Government Middle Schools and some standards were added. 471 additional pupils were admitted to the High School classes and 20,708 pupils were admitted to the Middle School classes in these Provinces Thus the time has come when the educational needs of the Province demand that the University already promised should no longer be denied to us.

"Before I conclude, I shall say just a few words in justification of the allotment I have asked for and I have done. The sum of 4 lakhs is indeed a very small amount in view of the needs and requirements of the entire University Scheme as drawn up by the Committee, but for the time being I would request the Government to provide 4 lakhs only, with a view to meet the cost of acquiring the necessary land, laying out sites and filling of quarries, etc. The Committee have estimated Rs. 3,25,326 for this purpose, but I have raised it to 4 lakhs in view of the considerable rise that has taken place in the prices of building materials and wages since the outbreak of the present war. As we all know the process of land acquisition is rather a long and dilatory process involving much delay, I hope the Government of India will not grudge to provide for the allotment I have asked for with a view to enable the Local Government to acquire land, etc., and be prepared to arrange for the construction of new buildings and the provision of necessary equipment soon after the Bill with regard to the Nagpur University is enacted. I do not think the acceptance of this Resolution will mean any financial embarrassment to the Government, as the requisite amount could be easily got either out of the surpluses or by the curtailment under the head of Civil Works.

"Sir, we stand on the eve of momentous changes, and in order that each Province may be in a position to work out its own salvation under the altered circumstances to be brought about by the constitutional changes now under contemplation, it is but in the fitness of things that every Province should be made self-contained, and as a prelude to that I hope and believe that this crying need of my Province will be immediately supplied."

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis:—"Sir, I beg to support this Resolution. The Nagpur University, which is so much desired by both the Government and the public, as all the new Universities in India, must conform to the higher ideal of a teaching and in some respects even a residential university. Necessarily its needs are great. Funds cannot indeed be too liberally spent to put it in a fit condition to discharge the important functions that will be assigned to it. There is everywhere in the Central Provinces a great demand for education, especially high education and education of a technical character. More colleges and more universities and more faculties are obviously required to meet the growing demand. Without ample funds no university can perform its duties according to modern ideals. It is only therefore just that we should have a larger grant for our university, and the figure suggested by the Hon'ble Mover is modest. More than half of this proposed grant will be required for the acquisition of grounds, and as prices of land are going up, it will be a good thing if the site is acquired as early as possible. This grant will enable the authorities to have this done." 11-23 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair:—"Sir, the Government desire the establishment of the Nagpur University at a very early date. The reasons for the delay I shall now explain at once. In 1913, we contemplated the establishment of a university at Nagpur, and invited the Chief Commissioner to submit his proposals for the establishment of that university. Later in the year, about November I think, he submitted a broad outline of the proposed university which he had in contemplation and informed the Government of India that he proposed to appoint a Committee to go into the whole question and submit a report to him. He submitted their Report in about November 1915. The cost according to the Report of the Committee amounted to about 90 lakhs capital and 8 lakhs recurring. He realised that it was impossible in the financial conditions now prevailing to start the university according to that scheme, and accordingly submitted a more modest scheme which required an outlay of 13½ lakhs capital and 2½ lakhs recurring. The Chief Commissioner came up to Simla and we had a conference with him; we had also the Patna University scheme before us; there were questions concerning the type of the university whether it should be of the unitary type as opposed to a collegiate or federal type; questions concerning the elective element on the Senate and Syndicate, and questions concerning the power of the executive Government to interfere. All these questions arose as I said also in connection with the Patna University and Hon'ble Members are aware of the great differences of opinion that 11-26 A.M.

existed on all these various questions. A compromise was no doubt arrived at with reference to the Patna University, but that was a compromise which, though accepted no doubt by the representatives of Bihar here, official and non-official, was unacceptable to the representatives of other universities with reference to other universities. The result was that we felt that these questions required very careful consideration; at that time the Calcutta Commission was appointed. Even with reference to the Patna University the question arose whether it would not be wise to defer the consideration of the Patna University scheme pending the report of the Calcutta Commission. In those circumstances, the Government felt that it would not be right to go on pending the report of the Calcutta Commission who were expected to deal with all those questions. Further, we also hoped that we might be able to submit the Nagpur University scheme, if not to all the members of the Calcutta Commission, to some members at least. Therefore, we have put it off till the receipt of the report from them. That is the reason of the delay. We have already, as Hon'ble Members are aware, made provision for the acquisition of a site for the university. We have allowed the Chief Commissioner the amount which was required by him for the acquisition of that site. Whether any additional sum would be required, as my Hon'ble friend seems to think, I am not now in a position to say. At any rate the Chief Commissioner has not asked for any increased grant. The Hon'ble Members will, in these circumstances, agree with me that so far as this Government is concerned, we have given indications of our earnest desire to go on with the establishment of the university. I assure them that the Government will do all they legitimately can to establish the university at an early date. With this assurance I trust the Hon'ble Member will be satisfied and will see his way to withdraw his Resolution. There are technical difficulties with regard to the Resolution as he has put it forward, but I do not want to refer to them. If, however, he wishes to press the matter to a division, then I have to oppose the Resolution."

11-30 A.M. The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Sir, I thank the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education for his relating the short history of the whole scheme as it now stands, and, in view of the definite assurances given by him and the situation explained, I beg to withdraw my Resolution. I do not mean to press it."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

11-33 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes introduced the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19:—

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Excise.	Excise.
Posts and Telegraphs.	Customs.
Stationery and Printing.	Posts and Telegraphs.
State Railways.	Stationery and Printing.
Subsidised Companies.	Protective Works, Railways.
	Subsidised Companies.
	Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure.
	Capital outlay on State Railways.

"Sir, I beg to introduce the heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19 which stand below my name. As has been the practice in former years, I will ask my Hon'ble friend, the President of the Railway Board, to deal generally with the subject of Railways. I cannot, however, pass railways by without emphasising the great importance of the special reserve fund of £20 million sterling which is being made this year. This provision will enable us to embark on fresh railway construction directly materials are available I know that my friend Sir Hugh Bray regards this 20 million sterling as an inverted form of conscience money, and doubtless he also regards the provision for railways in the coming year as a very meagre one. I agree that it is meagre, but it is not meagre because of any stinginess on the part of our Finance Member, but owing to the necessities of the position. My instructions to the Railway Board were to frame estimates for the coming year up to the maximum which could be spent with advantage. The figure which appears in my Hon'ble Colleague's Financial Statement represents the whole of what we are able to spend. My Hon'ble Colleague has been anxious to help the railways to spend all that they can usefully spend, and I know that it has been a great disappointment to him—perhaps the only disappointment,—that owing to the war we have not been able to make more rapid progress with railway development in India. The Government as a whole fully realise that the building of more railways in India is vital to the best interests of this country.

"To turn then to the subject of Posts and Telegraphs, I do not propose to weary Council with any repetition of the figures which have already been laid before them, but I think that it would interest Council to know the very heavy calls which have been made on the Department in connection with the war and to be told of the large number of the postal and telegraph staffs who are at present serving in the field. It has been with the utmost difficulty that the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs has been able to comply with the very heavy demands which have been made upon him. At present the total postal establishment with the various Expeditionary Forces consists of 23 Supervising Officers, 756 postmasters, inspectors and clerks and 659 menials, while there are 127 field post offices. The number of field post offices a year ago was 112.

"With the great increase of work both in the field and in India, it has been found that the General Post Office at Bombay is no longer able to combine its ordinary functions with that of Chief Base Office, and a separate Base Post Office for overseas forces has had to be opened there. It may also interest Council to hear one of the results of the curtailment of shipping facilities owing to the shortage of tonnage. The result to which I refer is the increased recourse which has been had to the foreign parcel post to some places, owing to the lack of tonnage. In some directions the use of the parcel post has expanded far beyond its legitimate scope. The abuse became so serious that in some cases restrictions had to be imposed. As an instance of the way in which the parcels post is used, I may mention that on one occasion a single individual in Basrah by a single post received 5,101 parcels from India weighing altogether 24 tons.

"Demands on the Telegraph Branch have continued to be heavy throughout the year, but I am glad to be able to say that these have at all times been met, although generally with considerable difficulty. At present roughly 2,500 members of the engineering and 700 of the traffic staff are working with the various Expeditionary Forces. The chief of these of course is Mesopotamia. As I mentioned last year, the unit charge for ordinary Inland telegrams was raised from 6 to 8 annas. This had the desired effect of checking the rate of expansion of the traffic, but notwithstanding this, the traffic has shown a small increase over the figures for the corresponding period last year. This has imposed a severe strain on the operative staff of the Department, and I can safely assert that had not the rate of increase of traffic been checked by the enhanced tariff, it would have been impossible to have had it dealt with efficiently by the staff, depleted as it is by the large number of men who have been deputed on field service. As regards engineering work during the year, in accordance with the policy which has been in force since early in war, no extra lines have been erected when these could possibly be deferred, but it was found that some additional lines were required in various parts of the country for the prompt disposal of the increased traffic, and that the provision of these could not with safety be postponed any longer. Accordingly, a certain number of important lines have been sanctioned, and their erection is now nearly complete. From the foregoing it will be seen that, notwithstanding the adverse circumstances, the record of the Department has been one of continued progress and the volume of the work has continued to expand. For this the staff of all grades deserve the greatest credit, and the way in which they continued to carry out their duties merits the highest praise. Government decided, I am glad to say, to ask the sanction of the Secretary of State to the grant of the same bonus to the staff of the Post Office and Telegraph Department as was given to the railways, and I am glad to say that the recommendation has been accepted. These two Departments have earned this special consideration by reason of the strain imposed on them ever since the war started.

"In particular, I should like to call the attention of Council to the good work done by Sir William Maxwell throughout the year in successfully meeting the extraordinary demands which have been made on the Post and Telegraph service not only in India, but throughout Mesopotamia. It is difficult to exaggerate the burden which has fallen on him in this respect and in the work of piloting the Department through a time of great stress and strain. I am only sorry that owing to sickness he is not here in his place to-day to hear what the Government, and I am sure all of you, think of his services.

"I turn now to the next item on the list, that of salt.

"In dealing with the subject of salt, I unfortunately find myself in the same position as I was last year in stating that one of our principal anxieties has arisen from the abnormally high prices which have prevailed. The rise in prices is no doubt due mainly to a curtailment of the normal supplies of foreign salt owing to tonnage difficulties. This, however, by no means accounts for the very rapid and speculative rise which took place in November and December last. We have taken every practical measure to cope with the situation. The first steps taken were steps in the direction of increasing the supply of salt, and with this end in view we secured rather more than a year ago what we believed was the best advice to be obtained in India, namely, that of Mr. Glen George, a highly skilled colliery engineer. Mr. Glen George gave us a very valuable report showing how the output of the Khewra mine could be increased with safety to the mine, and I may add that his services were generously placed at our disposal without remuneration by Messrs. Yule of Calcutta. Mr. Glen George's report has since been acted upon, and I myself paid a visit to the mine in October last. I hope that the net result of the improvements which have been made and are being made will be to double the previous output by the middle of next month. Apart from the Khewra mine, the largest internal supply of salt for Northern India has been the Sambhar Lake in Rajputana. In this case, unfortunately, there is no possibility of increasing the output this year owing to the heavy floods of the last monsoon and the consequent difficulties of evaporation. Apart from internal supplies, we are endeavouring to secure the assistance of the Shipping Controller in providing tonnage for increased supplies of salt from Aden and Port Said. In order to meet the efforts of the speculators in salt, we took powers last November to give priority at the salt mines and at the Sambhar Lake to indents by any local authority, and we wrote to the various Local Governments concerned urging that salt depôts should be established for the sale of salt at reasonable prices. In consequence of this suggestion, salt depôts have been opened by many of the Local Governments, and I think that you may find an example in Delhi of a depôt opened by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Hailey, the Chief Commissioner. We have further taken powers to control the price of salt, where necessary, in the interests of public safety, and these have already been acted upon in the Presidency of Bengal. The result of these steps has been a welcome fall in the price of salt throughout the country. We all recognise how important the price of salt is, and no efforts will be spared to keep the price of salt down to a reasonable level.

"The question of the high price of salt leads me on to the high prices of other commodities. I know that Hon'ble Members take a deep interest in the difficulties which are being felt by the poorer classes on account of the high prices of cotton cloth. The Government of India have been considering this difficult question with anxiety, and this anxiety, has been increased by the recent outburst of speculation in raw cotton. Any control of prices, the Government feel, can only be carried out with the co-operation of the persons interested in the trade, and with that end in view, Government have appointed a Committee consisting of :—

1. Mr. R. H. Brooke of the Bombay Company.
2. Mr. N. B. Saklatwala of Messrs. Tata Sons and Company.
3. The Hon'ble Purushottam Thakurdass.
4. Mr. C. N. Wadia.
5. Mr. Mangaldass Girdhardass.
6. Mr. J. P. Chrystal of Messrs. Chrystal and Company.
7. Mr. Pestonji N. Masani of Messrs. Masani and Company.
8. Sir. Bezonjee Dadabhoy Mehta of the Empress Mills, Nagpur.
9. Mr. Thomas Smith, Managing Director of the Muir Mills Company, Cawnpore.
10. Sir Clement Simpson of the Buckingham Mill Company, Madras.

Mr. Silver, Controller of Textile Supplies with the Munitions Board, and formerly Director of Industries in the United Provinces, will also be asked to join the Committee. The Committee will be presided over by an officer to be appointed by the Government of Bombay, and will begin their sittings in Bombay as soon as possible, and will among other things advise Government whether it is possible to fix a scale of mills charges for cotton piece-goods, and whether for this purpose it will be necessary or practicable to control in any way the price of, or operations in, raw cotton.

"In conclusion, there is one point to which, I think, I ought to draw the attention of Council in relation to the Customs figures. You will notice a reduction in the estimated receipts from Land Customs. This, though of no financial importance, has a certain significance, as it is mainly due to the abolition of the Kathiawar Land Customs Line—a change which has long been supported by several members of this Council. The Kathiawar Customs barrier has been a long-standing question of considerable difficulty, and I personally welcome its final disappearance, and am confident that the action which has been taken will be a considerable step forward in advancing the industry and commerce of the Kathiawar States. Passing to the more important figures of the Customs estimates, we all realise the effect upon our import and export trade of freight difficulties and of the restrictions which it has been found necessary to impose for military reasons. I do not, however, wish to pass from the subject without once more paying a tribute to the patriotic and ungrudging spirit in which all these restrictions have been accepted, and all these difficulties have been faced by the commercial community in this country. It is right too to express again my appreciation of the work of the Customs staff of all ranks upon whose shoulders a heavy burden of work and responsibility has been thrown."

11-48 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—"Sir, for the reason just stated by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes the Financial Statement with which we are now dealing is one of great interest and importance to railways. The Hon'ble Finance Member has always been most sympathetic to the development of railways in India. He has recognised, as every one must, the severe disability under which the railways have recently been placed inevitably as regards development. But he has not been satisfied with recognising a fact: he has provided a remedy. By reason of the reserve which he is laying by, railways and trade equally will view with more equanimity a difficult future.

"In the general debate, so far as railways are concerned, which arose out of the Financial Statement, two matters mainly emerge.

"The first is the enhancement of passenger fares, but as this has been made the subject of a separate Resolution, it is not necessary for me to deal with it now. I should like to refer to the second which is the development in this country of railway industries. As I explained in speaking on a Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri railways have in the past been hampered by the defective development in India of what from their point of view are the primary industries. But our hopes for the future are bright; we shall shortly get in the country the different kinds of steel which we require, plates and so on, and railways, I am sure, will do their utmost to take advantage of the change in the situation and develop the industries which this change makes possible. We have recently given a substantial indication of our desire to move in this direction by making the announcement to which I am glad that the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Kasimbazar referred, of a guarantee of 3,000 wagons a year to be built in India for ten years. We hope that this guarantee will enable the wagon industry to be established on a firm foundation in India.

"But now, Sir, to turn from our recent debate I venture to hope that I may be permitted on this occasion to deal with the subject of Railways in rather a special manner. The position of railways at the present time is altogether special, and I should like to take the opportunity of explaining it.

"In the first place, it is obvious that railways could not before the war have equipped themselves for duties which it had never been foreseen that they might be called on to perform. If there was want of foresight in this respect it is scarcely ther ailways that can be blamed for it: the fault, if fault there was, is common to the whole Empire. But apart from this I desire to lay stress on the fact that the railways are not merely what they have been made in say the last ten years. The materials in them and their rolling stock may be five years old or thirty; their administrative methods may go back a long time or may be recent improvements. But while there has been enormous growth there has been continuity. In the matter of personnel particularly, which is of supreme importance, if we are to understand the railway position, we must remember that railways are rather what they have made themselves in the last 50 years. The railway staff have inherited an ancient and honourable tradition.

"Now we have to consider how railways have met the present crisis. A review which I saw in a newspaper the other day, of our Administration Report, was headed in large letters 'Splendid war work.' That is the kind of appreciation which railways value in the midst of many discouragements and disappointments. To understand the part that our railways have played in the war we must not confine our views to India; we must look, I was going to say, over almost a hemisphere—Mesopotamia, Palestine and East Africa. In Mesopotamia the railways are Indian, lock, stock and barrel; in Palestine the rails that have taken the line as we were told the other day as far as Jerusalem are Indian rails; and much stock and material has gone to East Africa also In the matter of personnel also, and it is on personnel throughout that I wish to lay stress, we have given much help. Altogether railways can well claim that their share has been one of the most considerable items in India's contribution to the war.

"Next as regards the internal situation. Sir, it gave me much pleasure to hear the other day the handsome compliment which the Hon'ble Finance Member paid to railways in this Council. On behalf of our railways, I thank him for it. I can best illustrate his statement in which he said that the railways have rendered splendid service by a reference to our revenue figures.

"The Accountant General, Railways, told me that not many years ago he consulted a railway officer about the estimate he was making of the Railway Revenue in the coming year. The officer who was a very capable and experienced man said that he thought the Accountant General's figure was excessive, because railways simply would be unable to carry so much traffic, the figure in question was 56 lakhs, and the estimate for next year is 70 lakhs, a clear addition of no less than 25 per cent. ....".

[12TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Meyer; Sir Robert Gillan.]

The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—"I beg your pardon, 56 crores and 70 crores. I think the results have fairly astonished railway men themselves. They have been achieved by unremitting attention directed to ease the position wherever the pressure of traffic indicated a want of capacity; they have been accomplished only by the exercise of much ingenuity and above everything else by sheer hard work. And hitherto the railways have been able to claim—not indeed that there have been no inconveniences—I do not wish in any way to minimise the inconveniences which have been great, but that they have in one way or another taken all the traffic that came. In the last Administration Report the Board said: 'On no occasion, whether called on to undertake an entirely new work such as the manufacture of shell, to carry out against time the construction of new railways or to deal with a sudden press of essential traffic, have the railways failed to do what was required of them.' I am jealous that railways should not now lose credit, because requirements are rising to a point which constitutes an impossible demand on them. The primary fact which is well recognised no doubt, but which must be emphasised for any proper understanding of the position, is that immediately on the outbreak of the war the withdrawal of shipping threw on to the railways a very large amount of traffic which used to go by sea. We dealt with the position by giving preference to certain classes of traffic, coal, military stores, and so on; other traffic had to move when it could, but in spite of interruptions and inconveniences, the system worked because there was on the whole room for other traffic. The shipping difficulties, however, have gone on increasing, and the preferential traffic is constantly growing till now there is not room. A new situation is thus created, and I cannot conceal from the Council that there are very difficult times ahead of us. For this situation there is no heroic remedy possible. We are trying to meet it in three directions. In the first place, the departments of Government concerned are effecting all possible economies in preferential traffic. This is a very large matter, involving in fact, as the Council will recognise, the co-ordination of requirements with the sources of supply so as to require the minimum amount of railway transportation. Secondly, we have consulted Local Governments with the idea of setting up a provincial machinery which will enable railways to discriminate the essential movements in what we have hitherto regarded as general traffic, for such movements must under the conditions which we have now to face be given a definite and in fact a high degree of preference; on the other hand, they may be able to eliminate other movements as unnecessary. Lastly, the conditions which have now arisen justify us in pressing again and more strongly either for relief to be given to railways by the provision of a certain amount of more shipping or by the provision of more rolling stock. Under this last head, we must acknowledge that the difficulties are extreme, but we may hope that something will be found possible. I do not pretend that our difficulties will be removed; on the contrary, I must say plainly that they will increase and become more and more acute as time goes on. But when troubles come as they must come, let us remember this. It would be absurd of me to talk of railways adopting a selfish policy, or, on the other hand, of sacrificing their interests. It is a matter quite obviously not of railway policy, not even of Government of India policy, but of Empire policy. We have taken and hold Baghdad, we have taken and hold Jerusalem. These are truly Koh-i-Noors added to the Crown of Empire. Soldiers won them, but it was the railway man—the Indian railway man—who helped the soldiers.

"In conclusion, may I go back to the railway staff. The machine is much, but it is the men behind the machine that counts, and it is the question of staff which therefore is paramount. I may begin with a railway man who has got to the very top. I saw a paragraph about him the other day in a newspaper. It was headed the Geddes Family.

"'A painful impression, it said has been created by a revelation which comes from Scotland. It appears that in that gifted country there is another Geddes brother who is not a member of the Government or even the chief of any administrative commission! He is merely plain Mr. Geddes, the head of a large mercantile concern. 'How' it is justly urged, 'can we expect to win the war if we neglect the obvious precautions for national safety?'

Sir Eric Geddes truly has had an astonishing career. It is not as if he had been a Member of the Railway Board or even the Agent of a railway; he was Traffic Manager on the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway. But Sir Eric Geddes is only one example, there is General Nash who was Secretary to the Agent, East Indian Railway, and who, if not so well known to the public, has in the Railway Administration in France followed close behind Sir Eric Geddes. Then there are numerous Royal Engineer Officers, who have distinguished themselves in the same field of work, and if these officers belong to a world-wide corps, the fact remains that they got all their railway training in India, and it is a matter of much satisfaction that they should in competition with the best men from Home have so distinguished themselves. Nor are Railway Officers without honour in their own country. When a Munitions Board is formed Sir A. Anderson has to be one of its Members. When control over coal becomes necessary Mr. Godfrey is the man chosen for an extremely important and difficult task. But I can mention only a few names, and we have to think of the whole great army of hundreds of thousands of railway workers throughout India under all their officers. It is these men who bear the burden and heat of the day and deserve the credit of whatever railways have been able to achieve, whether on war work proper or railway working. As regards war work, I may take as an example the East Indian Railway, since within the last few days I have received a fresh copy of their list of officers and men serving in the war. This shows a total of 663 men, on active service, on Government service in East Africa or Mesopotamia and on Munitions work. I congratulate my friend to my right that in this fine list there are five Banerjees. Of these East Indian Railway men 16 have been killed in action, 20 wounded, 15 died; 2 have received the D. S. O., 6 the Military Cross, 1 the D. C. M., 6 have been mentioned in despatches; 26 received commissions in the British Army, 41 in the I. A. R. O. Thus our railway men are in touch with the heart-shaking events of war. Many of their comrades, many of their relatives have gone to the front. As regards railway working the Board said in their Administration Report—

'The results are a tribute to the efficiency of the staff as a whole and were rendered possible only by the co-operation of all ranks from the highest to the lowest. The Railway Board desire therefore to conclude their report with an acknowledgment of the devotion to duty of all grades of the railway staff and of the success they have attained.'

"Let me add a reference to what I said at the beginning of my speech. An army is worth nothing without morale, but the Indian railway staff have inherited as I said an ancient and honourable tradition. That tradition they have throughout times of extreme stress and difficulty nobly maintained. As one who has intimate knowledge of all the facts I claim that Government, India and the Empire owe to this staff a great debt of gratitude."

RESOLUTION RE REDUCTION OF RAILWAY FARES.

12 P.M. The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution, namely, that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should be pleased to direct the Railway Board to order the withdrawal of the enhancements made during the year 1917 in the rates of the passenger fare over the Indian Railways.'

"It will be obvious, Sir, that my Resolution confines itself to the enhancements made during the year 1917 in passenger fares. I do not refer here at all to the Freight Tax or any other profits which have been made during the last year in addition to those which were expected. The enhancements to which my Resolution refers were introduced, as I said in my speech at the first stage of the financial discussion, on the ground that they were necessary to discourage travelling. I pointed out that it was not necessary in order to achieve that object to enhance the rates, as that object had been partly achieved by the curtailment of the train services and could be further achieved by a restriction on the issue of tickets and, where necessary, by return of the fares which people might have paid for tickets when they could not obtain accommodation in the trains. I do not know, Sir, upon what ground it could be justified, but so far as I can see the reason which has been assigned for it certainly did not in my opinion justify the enhancement of fares. Now what has been the result of the enhancement? We find it stated at page 91 of the Financial Statement that while 62 crores was budgetted as the estimate for last year, the result has proved more favourable, and the revised estimate was placed at 68·25 crores; and now we have the estimate for the next year at 70·50 crores. This substantial improvement, the Statement explains, occurred on almost all the principal railways, and was due mainly to larger receipts from the carriage of troops and military stores and from wheat and coal traffic. But the enhancement of rates and the withdrawal of concessions have also contributed to a certain extent towards the railway earnings of the current year. Owing to the courtesy of the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan, I hold in my hand an abstract showing what amount of increase has been earned by railways on account of these enhancements. The result shows that, as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year (1915-1916), the third class shows a decrease of 29 million passengers, or 13·95 per cent. in the earnings. Taking the whole of the passenger traffic in all the four classes there was a decrease of 36·70 millions in the number of passengers, of which 80 per cent. was in the third class; while the earnings showed an increase of 61·92 lakhs, of which 95·8 per cent. was contributed by the third class.

"Now, Sir, the third-class passenger, as I showed the other day, contributes largely to the profits of the railways, and I showed that he has been contributing to a very large extent compared to the expenditure incurred on his behalf by the railways. Even when you take account of the interest charges and of the Sinking Fund, the profits earned are not unsatisfactory. But the result of this further enhancement has been that 61·92 lakhs, of which 95·8 per cent. came from the third class passenger, has been taken from the pockets of the travelling public and added to the revenues of Government. A further result of this has been that, while the larger portion of the revenue has come to Government, we read in the Financial Statement at page 91 that under surplus profits paid to the companies there was an increase of 11 lakhs due to the profits earned in the second-half of the current year, payment of which will be made next year. While, therefore, the larger portion of the profits has come to Government, a very substantial portion has been added to the profits of companies owing to the enhancements effected in passenger fares. I do not see, Sir, how these enhancements were justified, and it seems to me that they ought to be discontinued in the next year. It has never been said that this was done with the object of obtaining greater revenues; and if it was not, but merely results in larger revenues being obtained, then the matter ought to be re-examined. What was earned last year was earned; but during the present year, both in view of the surplus in hand, and in view of the fact that it is not necessary, in order to discourage people from travelling, to keep up these enhancements, they should be withdrawn.

"If that is my objection to the enhancements already effected I have also an objection to the manner in which it was done. The Railway Act does not, so far as I can see, provide or lay down any rules by which the rates of fares should be determined. Neither the Act nor the rules made under section 47 contains anything as to who should fix the rates and rules for passengers, etc. In the contracts which have been entered into by Government with companies there is a provision fixing the maxima and the minima rates. I may refer, for instance, to the latest provision that is to be found in the contract between the

Secretary of State in Council of India and the South Indian Railway Company, dated 21st December 1910. There it is laid down that:

'The Secretary of State shall from time to time authorise maximum and minimum rates within which the Company shall be entitled to charge the public for services rendered by way of or in connection with the conveyance of passengers or goods on the undertaking and shall prescribe the several classes and descriptions of passengers and goods to which such rates shall be respectively applicable, as well as the extent to which, within the maxima and minima so authorised, the Company may vary the said rates in respect of the distance or weight or special conditions under which such conveyance takes place or services are rendered.'

"I should like to know, Sir,—I hope the Hon'ble President of the Railway Board will tell us something of the procedure by which the variations between the maximum and minimum rates are secured. Evidently what happened, so far as the report of the Railway Board shows, was that the Railway Board felt that traffic should be discouraged, and they held a meeting at which they agreed that as a general principle fares and rates should be enhanced to their maximum in order to discourage travelling with a view to avoiding overcrowding and curtailing train services, and at a subsequent meeting they brought about these enhancements. I should like to know whether the matter was considered only by the Railway Board, or whether the Executive Government were also asked to consider the matter and accorded their sanction to the proposal. It seems to me, Sir, that the procedure by which this enhancement has been brought about, and can be brought about, is open to great objection, because here it is in the power of the Railway Board, acting in consultation with the Agents of the Railway Companies, to impose what undoubtedly is a great deal of extra taxation on the people. I quoted the other day the opinion of Major Conway Gordon, who said that any amount taken in excess of what was required was undoubtedly extra taxation; and I submit that here we find the Railway Board, either with the consent or without the consent, of the Executive Government, imposing a very heavy extra taxation without the matter at all coming before the Legislative Council and without the public who are concerned in the enhancement of these fares being given any opportunity to have any say about the matter. In the matter of freights, Sir, as there is no provision about the increase of freights in the Railway Act, I find that the Government felt it necessary last year to have an Act passed, and the Freights Tax Act—or rather, the Railway and Steam Vessel Tax Act, XIII of 1917, was accordingly passed to enable the railways to take a surcharge on the goods traffic.

"Well, that was a matter of surcharge and they may have felt that there was a special necessity for having legislation on that point. But I do not see why there should not be some provision in regard to the enhancement of fares. In England, there is a provision in the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, in regard to proposed increases in reference to goods traffic, and it is provided that the revised classification should not come into force unless it has been enacted by the Houses of Parliament. The provision shows that the Act of Parliament confirming any provisional order which the Commissioners under the Act are authorised to pass shall be a public general Act, and the rates and charges mentioned in the Provisional Order as confirmed by such Act shall, from and after the Act coming into operation, be the rates and charges which the railway company shall be entitled to charge and make. When the Provisional Order is passed, the public have an opportunity of having their say as to whether the proposed enhancements are right and proper, and then the matter comes up before Parliament before those increased rates and charges can be brought into operation. I think, Sir, that there should be some such provision in our Railway Act, too. But, however, at present I am speaking without full knowledge of what procedure was adopted in those circumstances. I hope my friend, the President of the Railway Board, will enlighten the Council on this point. In any event, so far as the present enhancements are concerned, I would ask the Finance Member of the Government to consider whether the enhancement should not be withdrawn in the next year."

[12TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir George Barnes.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—" Sir, my Hon'ble friend the President of the Railway Board, has dealt with the heading of railways to-day, but he tells me that he feels a delicacy in replying to the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's Resolution because of the way in which it is framed. The Resolution, you will notice, asks that directions should be given to the Railway Board by the Government, and consequently it is, perhaps, better that the resolution should be dealt with by myself. I will, however, ask the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan to say a few words about the legal aspect of the matter to which the Hon'ble Pandit referred just now. The Resolution asks 'that the Railway Board should be directed to order the withdrawal of the enhancement made during the year 1917 in the rates of the passenger fares over the Indian railways.' The great fact we have to keep in mind is that owing to the heavy demands which are made upon railways as some of the results of the present war, they are unable to carry all the traffic which is offered. This is partly due to the fact that coal which was formerly carried from Calcutta to Bombay and Karachi by sea has now to be taken across India in railway wagons. As His Excellency informed Council in his opening speech, no less than 40,000 wagons are continually occupied in this way. There are further heavy demands of a purely military character, and we are at the present time unable to carry by railway a great deal of merchandise which is necessary for the comfort and well-being of the people of this country. In these circumstances, we decided to take the step which is being taken in England and France in a far more drastic way and cut down our passenger service to some extent. The subject was thoroughly discussed with the different railways, and reductions were made which finally amounted to 16 million train miles a year, that is over a million and a quarter train miles per month. The reduction in capacity, however, was not so much as these figures would indicate, for if the trains were fewer, they were heavier, being run at reduced speeds with heavier loads. There was, however, of course a large reduction in capacity. It was impossible for Government to accept the situation in which it was certain that the trains would be besieged by passengers far beyond the capacity of railways to carry them; not only in such conditions would there be great inconvenience to everyone desiring to use the railways, but the risk of serious accidents. It was essential in the circumstances to reduce travel, and the Government took the only economic step at their disposal, namely, that of slightly enhancing the fares. The measures taken have been in some degree effective. In the half year ending 30th September 1917—the latest figures which I have—the number of third class passengers on 14 of the principal lines was 30 million less than in the corresponding half of 1916. But, in spite of this reduction, there has, I regret to think, been serious overcrowding. The number of people wishing to travel has not been reduced in proportion to the capacity of the trains to carry them. The Hon'ble Pandit, if I follow his argument rightly, says—

12-12 P.M.

'Your object in enhancing the fares was not to make revenue, but you have made revenue, and therefore you ought to withdraw the enhancement.'

I must point out to him that if fares were now to be reduced to their old level, we should immediately be faced with the difficulties I have described. I recognise fully the inconvenience to which the public travelling in every class are put at the present time. As the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea said the other day, we have increased the fares while reducing facilities, but I hope that it will be clear to him from what I have said that the two things really go together. I recognise also the hardship involved in an enhancement of fares to the poorer classes of the community. It was in fact a measure to which we were only with reluctance brought, but it is a necessity of the war, and in this connection I should like to point out that India in the way of travelling facilities as in every other way is suffering far less than any part of Europe and than any of our Allies with the exception perhaps of Japan. I regret, Sir, that it is not possible for Government to accept this Resolution."

[Sir Robert Gillan; Pandit M. M. Malaviya.] [12TH MARCH, 1918.]

12-18 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—" Sir, as desired by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes, I may say a few words with regard to the point that was raised by the Hon'ble Pandit. It seems to me that he was really raising in his speech the very largest constitutional questions. He desires, as I understand him, that the maximum rates and fares should be fixed by legislation. That seems to me........."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—" May I interrupt my Hon'ble friend, Sir. I did not say that the maxima should be fixed by legislation. I said that there should be a provision that when fares are raised, it should be by legislation."

The Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan:—" It seems to me to be very much the same thing. And at any rate it seems to be irrelevant to the present discussion. The method under which fares are dealt with at present may in the Hon'ble Pandit's view be objectionable; but there is no question about its legality. As he read out to us, the companies are restricted in dealing with rates and fares within certain maxima which are fixed by Government, and it is naturally within the power of Government to enhance these maxima when they consider it necessary. I should like to add that the increase of the maxima in regard to the third class was in fact a very small matter. We allowed the maximum to be raised only for mail and fast passenger trains, because some of the Agents considered that that would be desirable. Other Agents have met the difficulty by not allowing intermediate and third class passengers to travel by mail and fast passenger trains who are going for less than a certain distance, and there is in fact only one Company, the Great Indian Peninsula, who to some extent have taken advantage of the opportunity to raise, their fares and they have introduced for trains of this kind a fare of 3½ pies instead of 3 pies which was the old maximum."

12-20 P.M. The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—" With regard, Sir, to the remarks which my Hon'ble friend the Member for Commerce and Industry has made, I wish to emphasise that I do not complain of the curtailment of the train services. I recognise that in war time curtailment of the train services is necessary. My complaint is that when the services were curtailed, it was not necessary to enhance the rates in order to prevent over-crowding. The Hon'ble Member himself has said that in spite of the enhancements made there has been a great deal of over-crowding. Now the method that has been adopted to remedy over-crowding shows that enhancements were not necessary to effect that object, nor have they been successful in doing so. The means to remedy over-crowding are provided in the Act and in the Regulations of Railways. A certain number of seats are to be occupied in every compartment. Why not enforce that provision? The accommodation is limited in every train, and if the Railway authorities will take a little care they would be able to see that the number of men that can find accommodation in the trains do really enter. There has been a sore complaint for a long time that there has been a great deal of over-crowding. I am sure the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry and other Members of the Government will have read the letter of Mr. Gandhi which was recently published on that question. It is necessary that over-crowding should be prevented, and in order to do so what is needed is to issue strict instructions to the railway authorities in order to see that there is no over-crowding. Enhancement of the fares was not necessary to attain that object, and it has not been able to achieve that object.

" Then, Sir, with regard to what the Hon'ble Member said that 30 millions of people travelled less, I submit that here again it was not on account of the enhancement, but it was because there were no trains available.

"Then my friend said the complaint is that if the revenue were given up now, the difficulties which he has mentioned of over-crowding would arise again. I submit they would not. Try it, and you will find that when the number of trains is limited, when the compartments are limited, there cannot be too much of an over-crowding, particularly if you take steps to prevent it.

"Then the Hon'ble Member said that India was suffering far less than the allied countries. Now, I do not dispute that, but India is suffering to the extent that she is, and she certainly does not want to see more suffering. The question is whether in view of the high prices that prevail, whether in view of the great hardships which are already being suffered by the great bulk of the people of this country owing to the war, it is right and proper that so much more should be added to their suffering by the enhancements in question. Nobody can deny, and I am sure the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry will not deny, that the people in general are undergoing very serious hardships. It is lucky that the hardships are not of the same severity as in other allied countries, but that does not afford any justification for adding to their discomforts in a way which is not justified by the requirements of the public. If it was necessary to raise a larger revenue, and if the matter was taken up by Government from that point of view, I could understand it; but, I submit, that these enhancements were necessary in order to discourage traffic has not been shown in any way. If that is so, then I submit the enhancements should be withdrawn.

"Then the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan referred to the difficulties in the way, Now I should first like to ask my Hon'ble friend as to where was the necessity of raising the maxima? I submit that there was no necessity for the maxima being enhanced. That has given rise to a fear that there may be a further enhancement in contemplation, or that it may be resorted to in the future when it is felt that the enhancements already effected are not sufficient to discourage traffic. I should like to know where the necessity for these further enhancements of this maxima was.

"Then, Sir, my friend has spoken of the procedure and said that I have raised a large constitutional issue. Undoubtedly I have. At a time like this when the people are suffering various hardships on account of the war, sufferings which are not unknown and which cannot be unknown to any thinking man in this country, it should not be possible by an executive order to add to the sufferings of the people by taking from them 61 and odd lakhs in one half year from Railways. I do not know what the total will come to. 61 and odd lakhs is only the revenue of one half year, the first half year in which the enhancements were in operation. Probably in the next half year the earnings have been greater. In fact I find it stated in the Statement in paragraph 169 of the budget 'it is anticipated that the favourable conditions of traffic which have contributed so largely to the earnings of the current year will be fully maintained in the ensuing year and that the enhancements of fares and rates introduced for the most part during 1917 will in 1918-19 affect the rates of the whole year, and consequently add more to the total of receipts than they have done this year.'

"Now, I submit, Sir, that this should not be possible, and that if it is not right that it should be so done, then the Government should not sanction the enhancements. My friend has not answered the questions that I put as to how this was actually effected. I did not suggest that it was illegal. I suggested that it was objectionable, and I look forward to hearing that the matter had been considered not merely by the Railway Board, but by the Government of India before the enhancements were sanctioned. In any event as I said before, I submit that the matter ought to be reconsidered and these enhancements should be removed."

The Resolution was put and negatived.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1918-19.

12-28 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent introduced the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19 :—

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Registration.	Registration.
Jails.	General Administration.
Police.	Courts of Law.
Medical.	Jails.
	Police.
	Medical.

"Sir, I do not propose to deal at any great length with the heads of the budget with which the Home Department is directly connected. There is very little for me to say, and the variations in the figures are made clear in the explanatory memorandum.

"Under the head of Law and Justice, the number of Judges in some of our High Courts and Chief Courts has been increased in order to enable those Courts to cope with accumulated arrears. In two Provinces provision has also been made for the re-organization of the pay and grading of the process-serving establishment.

"Under the head of Police, however, I should like to draw attention to one or two points. We are steadily pursuing the policy which has been developed in the last few years of improving, where necessary, the pay and the prospects of the lower ranks. The various schemes provided in this connection are mentioned in the explanatory memorandum. The increased cost of living, and in the case of the military and frontier police, the superior attractions for the army have lately rendered service in these ranks less and less sought after, and in order to obtain recruits of the right stamp and to keep them efficient and contented, it is necessary to assure them of a living wage. With this object the sanction of the Secretary of State has recently been obtained to the grant of local and special allowances to Head Constables and Constables in the Bombay Presidency and City Police and to the police in Sind, and increased allowances have also been sanctioned for the Calcutta police

"A feature of the several police re-organization schemes with which we have been and are dealing now is that successful efforts have been made to meet the increased cost of salaries by economy in other directions, principally by a reduction of the personnel. We realise in fact that where it is possible it is better to have fewer constables and pay them well than maintain a larger number of men who are underpaid and discontented.

"The task of the police-force grows yearly heavier, and the current year has been no exception to that rule. I need only instance the troubles in Bihar to which reference was made by, I think, more than one Hon'ble Member. These disturbances have necessitated the entertainment of an additional police-force, but I am glad to say that we hope that this expenditure will be temporary.

"Another channel of expenditure under the head Police consists of grants made to philanthropic societies, notably the Salvation Army, to assist them in the reclamation of members of criminal tribes. This movement has been directed with considerable energy and success in more than one Province and is, we believe, resulting in the conversion of many hundreds of these criminal outcasts into honest and peaceful workers.

"In the Medical Department I am glad to say that, in spite of financial stringency and the ever-increasing difficulties of personnel, the administration continues slowly but steadily to expand. As will be seen, a considerable sum has been provided for expenditure on hospitals, dispensaries and grants-in-aid. My predecessor, in speaking under this head last year, made special reference to the very able control and direction of this Department by the late Director-General, Sir Pardey Lukis. And I should be guilty of a grave omission if I did not refer to the irreparable loss which the Department has suffered from Sir Pardey's untimely death. I do not wish to advert on this occasion to his great services and abilities ; I have referred to them before and they are well known to all the Members of this Council. I think they will also not be forgotten readily, but I ought not to let this occasion pass without mentioning the great loss which, I believe, the Government and the Council have suffered by his death. I have nothing else with which I need trouble Hon'ble Members under any of the heads which concern me, except perhaps to express my regret that another year has brought the Jail Commission, in the projection of which my predecessor took such interest, no nearer than before. I hope, however, that we may expect great results from this Commission when it is constituted."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—I " beg to introduce the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1918-19 :— 12-34 P. M.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Opium.	Refunds.
Interest.	Opium.
Mint.	Stamps.
Receipts in aid of superannuation.	Income Tax
Exchange	Interest on obligations other than the Public Debt.
Miscellaneous.	Mint
	Civil Furlough and Absentee allowances.
	Superannuation Allowances and Pensions.
	Exchange
	Reduction or Avoidance of Debt.

"I have dealt fully with the Financial estimates in my speech introducing the Financial Statement, and they have been further dealt with in the Secretary's Supplementary Memorandum. So all that I need do now is to take this opportunity of bringing to notice the excellent work which the Mints of Calcutta and Bombay have been doing during the last two years or more. The demands on these mints for coinage, not only of our rupees and other coins, but of coinage for Egypt, Ceylon, the Straits and Australia, have been very heavy, but every demand has been met cheerfully and effectively. I may illustrate the extent of these demands, ours as well as the kindred countries I have mentioned, by stating that in the ten months ending 31st January last, the Calcutta Mint minted nearly 130 million silver pieces, the Bombay Mint over 136 million. The Calcutta Mint in addition coined 124 million bronze coins, of which rather more than 10 million were penny and half-penny pieces for the Australian Government. The copper coinage amounted to 3 million pieces, for the Ceylon Government. The Bombay Mint, in addition to the silver coinage to which I have just referred, also minted some 52 million nickel coins. In all, the two mints between them minted nearly 450 million coins. Besides this the mints have taken their share in the production of munitions, having been engaged in the manufacture of copper driving bands for shells I think the Council will agree that this is a first-class record."

THE INDIAN PAPER CURRENCY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I beg to move that the Bill to amend the Indian Paper Currency (Amendment) Act, 1917, be taken into consideration. I explained fully the objects of this Bill and the needs which 12-36 P.M.

have occasioned it, first in my speech on the 1st March introducing the Financial Statement, and then in my supplementary speech on the same date introducing the Bill. I may say that although the Bill was published for criticism, no criticism was offered."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—"I now move that the Bill be passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to Wednesday, the 13th of March 1918.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Wednesday, the 13th March, 1918.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding, and 59 Members, of whom 56 were Additional Members.

THE INDIAN ARMY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Major-General A. H. Bingley :—" Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911." 11-5 A.M.

THE USURIOUS LOANS BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to give additional powers to Courts to deal in certain cases with usurious loans of money or grain. " 11-6 A.M.

THE INDIAN COMPANIES RESTRICTION BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to control the withdrawal of capital from the money-market by companies. 11-7 A.M.

" In introducing the Financial Statement, I explained at some length the nature and extent of the obligations which the Government of India have to incur in India at the present time, either directly on behalf of the Home Government, or in the supply of funds for the finance of exports of national importance to Great Britain and the Allies. I emphasised the necessity of raising, by our loan operations next year, as large a sum as possible for these purposes, and indicated our intention, in order to eliminate undesirable competition with our efforts in this direction, of restricting issues of capital in this country except in so far as these are required for enterprises of national importance. It is not, therefore, necessary for me to say much in moving the introduction of the present Bill which has already been circulated to Hon'ble Members, as the objects of the legislation will be readily understood.

" As mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the Bill provides that no company other than a private company as defined by the Indian Companies Act, shall be registered, or increase its share capital, or issue debentures, or call up unpaid capital, except in accordance with the terms of a license, to which such conditions may be attached as the Government of India consider necessary with reference to the circumstances of each case. Very similar restrictions have been in force in the United Kingdom since an early period of the war, and also in India in the case of issues of capital by Municipal bodies, Port Trusts and Branch Line Railways. Until recently, however, conditions in India did not appear to necessitate the more general restrictions now contemplated, as the amount of new capital lost to us by diversion to non-war purposes in this way has not been very great. Now owing to easy money-market conditions, the position has changed, and we understand that large issues of new capital are in contemplation. It has now, therefore, become necessary to bring the issue of new capital in this country under Government-control, so as to prevent the employment on less useful objects of funds which would at present serve the country better if invested with Government or employed on some object of national importance.

" In the recent general debate on the Financial Statement apprehension was expressed by one or two speakers as to a complete embargo on private flotations. It will be seen from the Bill, and from what I said then, that this is not contemplated. All we do contemplate is, to put such flotations under control by requiring a license before they can issue.

" In considering whether a license shall be granted, we shall, as I said in my speech in the general debate to which I have referred, bear in mind the following considerations :—

(1) Would the enterprise be likely to attract money which would otherwise go into Government loans or Treasury Bills ?

(2) If so, is it still justified on the ground that it is nevertheless useful, in these war circumstances, as being of assistance in the speeding up of war material, or likely to result in increase of other production which would save tonnage on imports from Home ?

These are necessarily general propositions, and each case will have to be considered on its own merits.

" Further, as I said the other day, I think there is much value in a suggestion made by Mr. Hogg in the general debate on the Financial Statement, that in some cases it might be feasible to allow a company to proceed to flotation on condition that it should lodge its funds with Government, by taking up Treasury Bills or in connection with the coming War loan, until it is able to apply them to real advantage for its own purposes.

" I may say that we propose, following the example of the Home Government, to appoint an Advisory Committee to assist the Government in dealing with these matters. Probably, indeed, two Committees, one with its headquarters in Calcutta, and the other in Bombay, since it is in these two places that the bulk of the important flotations would occur; and on each of the Committees there will be representation of Indian as well as of European commerce.

" The legislation in question being of the character of a war measure, it is provided by clause 1 (2) of the Bill that it should be in force only for the period of the war, and for six months thereafter.

" I now move for leave to introduce the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

[13TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Meyer; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"I now introduce the Bill, and move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

THE INDIAN SOLDIER'S LITIGATION BILL.

11-12 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the law to provide for the special protection, in respect of civil and revenue litigation, of Indian soldiers serving under war conditions.

"I think that this Bill will command the ready approval of Council, as its only object is to protect, during the war, the interests of Indian soldiers who are prevented from looking after those interests themselves The Council is aware that, in 1915, legislation to effect this object was enacted, and the present Bill is only intended to simplify the procedure and to render that measure more effective. The purpose is to provide that suits in which Indian soldiers are interested shall not be decided when they are absent and engaged on active service. Under the law at present if any Civil or Revenue Court has reason to believe that any party to a proceeding is an Indian soldier serving under war conditions and is not properly represented, the Court has to give notice to the prescribed authority. The prescribed authority may, if it considers postponement necesssary in the interests of justice, certify to that effect, whereupon the Court has to grant a postponement. Similarly, a Collector if he has reason to believe that an Indian soldier who is interested in litigation is serving under war conditions and is not properly represented, may certify that he is of opinion that a postponement of the proceeding is necessary in the interests of justice, and the Court then, if it is satisfied that the soldier is not properly represented, postpones the case. Both in the case of the Court and the Collector, it will be seen that it is necessary to come to a finding whether a soldier is serving under war conditions or not before any action can be taken; and to ascertain this fact frequently necessitates somewhat prolonged inquiries during which period the interests of the soldier may suffer considerably. In these circumstances, it has been thought desirable to lay down a somewhat simpler procedure, and under the Bill, if a soldier is not represented in the Court and the Court is satisfied, either by the certificate of a Collector or of its own knowledge—not that he is serving under war conditions but that he is unable to appear—it must suspend the proceedings and give notice to the prescribed authority. The prescribed authority—which is a military authority—will then certify whether the soldier is serving under war conditions, and whether a further postponement is necessary. It should not be difficult for either the Court or the Collector to ascertain that a particular man is absent from home and unable to appear in Court. The Court will know itself whether he is represented, and if he is not represented and not able to appear, the proceedings will be suspended pending an inquiry as to whether he is serving under war conditions—which is a matter that can only be inquired into by the military authorities. It has been said that a certain number of men are reluctant to join the Army at present lest their private interests may suffer, and I am sure that the Council will agree with me that any procedure which will tend to the better protection of their interests is desirable, not only on the ground that men who are serving the Crown are entitled to every consideration, but also in the interests of recruiting.

"The only other change made in the present Bill is the embodiment in the Act itself of the definition of the term 'serving under war conditions.' The words which have been used in the Bill are taken from a notification which was issued in the Government of India Gazette, and they have been found suitable in practice. It is, therefore, considered desirable to insert them definitely in the Act. At the same time the opportunity has been taken, as the amendments though small were very numerous, to consolidate and re-enact the measure in an amended form."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill, and to move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

RESOLUTION RE LAND REVENUE BEING WHOLLY PROVINCIALIZED.

11-18 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I ask your permission and the permission of the Council, Sir, to move the second Resolution which stands in my name first, because I shall have to deal with the resources of the country in dealing with that Resolution, and it might be convenient, before I ask the Council to accept my education scheme, if I were to deal with those resources. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer has kindly said to me that he would have no objection to this being done, and the Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair also does not object?"

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"Certainly. You can take up the second Resolution first."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the land revenue should be wholly provincialised.'

"The Hon'ble the Finance Minister, in introducing the Statement this year has told us that the subject of provincialising particular branches of revenue and expenditure is at present engaging the attention of Government in connection with post-war reforms. One reason why I have sought the assistance of the Council to make the particular recommendation in question is, that the subject of land-revenue administration and land-revenue is of such a highly important character that a recommendation by this Council might be of extreme use to the Government in arriving at a conclusion on the subject. The question has become one of practical and immediate importance, having regard chiefly to the reform schemes now under discussion, and I feel sure the Government will ultimately be able to accept this recommendation, whatever may be their position at the present moment. Self-government, whether it is to be reached at an early date or at a somewhat distant date, postulates this that we are on the eve of changes tending gradually towards a federal administration in India, and it is desirable, before any large step is taken, that the ground should be cleared in differentiating Imperial finance from Provincial finance, and in determining as to whether any large items of revenue should be provincialised or should be Imperial in their character I am sure Hon'ble Members will agree with me that one cardinal principle which is accepted by all is that, as far as possible, Imperial finance should be separated from Provincial finance, and that the two should be so arranged that, in the practical work of administration; there may be no friction as between the Imperial and Provincial Governments on the one hand, and as between the various peoples occupying this historic land on the other. To avoid friction between the Imperial and Provincial Governments, one necessary condition will be that, as far as possible, the heads should not be divided. It was on that basis that the people of India, assembled in the Indian National Congress, have recommended that there should be no divided heads hereafter, thereby including land-revenue under the resources at the disposal of the Provincial administration. I said that the second condition should be that there must be no friction between the various peoples in the future federal financial administration, and that we should so arrange the subjects as to produce the minimum of unavoidable friction. The example of other countries seems to show that land-revenue throughout has been largely treated as a subject for local legislation for local improvements, and the Imperial federal governments have hitherto abstained from looking to this source for the general needs of the country. In the United Kingdom, although it is not a federated Empire in the strict sense of the term, the land tax was only £640,000 as against £514 million of taxation for 1916-17. You find in the Union of South Africa, also, that the land-revenue or quit-rent forms an insignificant part of the total revenue, and in Canada also you find the same. In Australia, the same position obtains, and you find in the German Empire also the same state of things. Consequently, I am justified in my remark that the example of other countries is in favour of the suggestion that I make in this Resolution.

"Then there is another point, Sir, which is even of greater importance than the lesson furnished by the example from other countries, and that is this. Would you minimise the friction between the various peoples in your future financial administration if you provincialise the land-revenue? I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that that would be the result. Every one who knows anything about land-revenue knows also that the incidence of taxation varies considerably in the different Provinces; the tenures are entirely different, and the total amount of revenue realised in the different Provinces differs largely, and consequently in any future federation when the question is to how much each Province has to contribute comes up for discussion, there can be no more fruitful cause for quarrel than this land-revenue. I think, therefore, that it is, in the interests of future peace, that land-revenue should be placed under Provincial, and not under Imperial, finance.

"Then, again, it is more likely that land-revenue, as well as agriculture with which it is closely allied, would be considerably improved if the Provincial Governments, that is, the people concerned, have a direct and deep interest therein, and not if it should be shared either between the Provincial and the Imperial Governments. One perpetual cause of strife—if I may say so—between the people and the Government is with regard to the provincial settlements. I do not mean to suggest that in the very near future the hand of the Government will be completely taken away. I am not dealing with that question at the present moment. But, apart from that another cause of irritation against the Government is, that it is supposed to administer the land-revenue in a harsh manner. Such charges cannot possibly be brought if the administration of the land be in the hands of the people themselves, who would be responsible to looking forward to an extending revenue in this or some other shape if their future requirements are to be met adequately and properly. Therefore, from that point of view, too, Sir, I would suggest that this should be provincialised entirely. I quite see that on technical grounds something might be said for its being at least partially Imperial. It may be said that land is in a sense the property of the Crown; that the Crown should have some interest therein, and that the Government of India as representing the Crown should have a direct share. But the Provincial Governments also represent the Crown; we are only differentiating between the two for the purposes of general administration, and consequently there does not seem to be much force in the argument for imperialisation based on the general theory of all the lands being vested in the people as a whole and the Crown representing the people.

"Then, again, Sir, it may be asked whether irrigation would come under the head of land-revenue. Irrigation has, I know, been treated as a commercial undertaking; and, strictly and logically perhaps, it may be contended that irrigation should be under the Government of India, inasmuch as I propose that all commercial undertakings should be under the Government of India. But there is one strong argument against that being done, and that is, that land-revenue administration and irrigation administration are so closely allied that it would be difficult to sever them, and after all the people that will benefit thereby and who would be desirous of making a rapid advance would be the people immediately concerned, and I therefore think that irrigation administration, irrigation revenue, and irrigation prospects would be considerably bettered under the Provinces than under the Imperial Government. Of course, such help will be given and such control as may be needed, would, I am sure, be retained by the Imperial Government in the matter.

"Then, there is another point from which I view the question, and that is this: Provincial Governments and the people would naturally be jealous, having regard to the varying quantities of the amounts raised in the various Provinces, of retaining as much as they can in their own hands and in their own Provinces, and consequently the future growth of revenue would be in the direction of the growth of cesses, and not in the growth of settlement revenue; it should naturally be left to the Provinces to determine the exact form and the rate of progress under either head. Therefore, from the point of view of a healthy development of the revenue resources of the country, it is also desirable that land-revenue should be wholly provincialised.

"Then the more important question would still remain as to whether, when the Government have as in the past been looking to the land-revenue as a permanent source from which it is to meet the general needs of the country, whether under those circumstances it is desirable that they should be asked to forego it completely in favour of the Provinces. I think, whatever may be the state of the finances and whatever may be the exact method by which any deficiency in Imperial revenue would have to be replenished from the various Provinces, whether it is to be from the people in proportion to their population or in proportion to their resources as ascertained by the revenue of the Provinces, whatever may be the exact method that may be adopted, the method that is suggested by the Congress, and I think with very great wisdom, too, is that land-revenue should be wholly provincialised. I think at the present time what is needed is a careful analysis of Imperial needs and of Imperial resources, and then we shall be in a position to find that Government would be in a position to forego land-revenue for the benefit of provincial administrations, burdening them, of course, with the corresponding expenditure. There are two ways of looking at the matter: one is by taking Imperial revenue and Imperial expenditure as at present; the other is to consider what are truly Imperial sources of revenue, and what are Imperial items of expenditure, and whether the two can be made to balance one another. I take it that modern scientific opinion seems to be that the commercial departments, such as railways, posts and telegraph, etc., income-tax, customs, general stamps, salt, tributes from Native States and opium are subjects which are purely Imperial in their character. Commercial undertakings have been Imperial hitherto, and I do not think any very lengthy argument is required to support the continuation of that state of things. I think that major irrigation is a subject which might, perhaps, be deemed to require a separate treatment, having regard to the special considerations I have urged; besides the growth under that head has not been very large, and consequently, I think, it is a subject which might be tacked on to land-revenue. Salt has been always Imperial and tributes of Native States are Imperial in character, so is opium which is not excise. It is to be noted under this head that the Government derive the revenue from dealings with foreign States chiefly. Now, in regard to stamps, the question would be whether stamps should be wholly Imperial or only partially so. The stamp revenue is derived under the Court Fees Act and the general Stamp Act. Inasmuch as the administration of justice is purely Provincial, it might be suggested that the Court fees to be raised might have some relation to judicial administration, and consequently attention may be paid to the distinction, and the revenue from Court fees may be treated as provincial. The revenue from general stamps would really and properly be Imperial. Income-tax is at present a divided head, but I think the tendency of modern opinion is to regard it as a purely Imperial head, and that it should be left to the federal Government, inasmuch as it is difficult to divide it, the sources of income running in many cases into various Provinces. It is also proper that when we have a graduated system of income-tax based on the theory of a man's ability to contribute to the general expenditure that income-tax should be an Imperial head. One thing is against it, and that is that the Provincial Governments which have to collect the revenue might not have the same interest as if they were partners therein. I do not go so far as to say that, but there may be a slight inappreciable weakening of enthusiasm. Thus under the various heads above referred to, deducting collection charges, the revenue amounts to £27·8 millions. The question is what services are purely Imperial. I include therein the debt services and also the military services. There are certain Imperial services of general administration which may be brought under this head. Of course, Mint and Exchange are, from the financial point of view, of very little importance although sometimes they play an important part. The Political Department is included under Imperial. I do not think that logically the expenditure that is now borne from Imperial revenues towards the payment in England of pensions, etc., is truly Imperial in character. I think it is wholly provincial. In 1916-17, making allowance for nearly 5 millions sterling extra expenditure in the Army taking the estimates of 1913-14, we find an expenditure of 27·7 millions, and it can be easily met from 27·8 revenue. And we have also to note in this connection that under the heads which we have selected the growth of revenue is much more rapid than under those which we have given to the Provinces. The growth of land-revenue during the 11 years before the war was 30 lakhs per annum (or £20·6 million—18·4 divided by 11); if you take the longer period from 1858 to 1918, you find that it is the same because the revenue rose from 18 to 36 crores. From the incremental point of view the surrender of this revenue to the Provincial Governments is not of such extreme importance in view of the extremely large growth of revenue under the heads classed as Imperial. Under Forests the same thing may be said, the increase is small. Under Stamps it is 15 lakhs, whereas under Customs it is really 50 lakhs. The shipping tonnage was in 1913-14 17·3 and in 1916-17 it was only 11·9 million. But for the restrictions imposed by the war you could have expected a revenue of 15 millions, whereas it was only 8 millions. The table at page 77 of Commercial Statistics shows that under the various important heads, rice, wheat, etc., there has been an immense reduction in exports. Without wearying the Council by going into details if we look to the normal growth of the quantity of merchandise and its value and the increased rates which are levied, it seems to me that you can derive an increasing revenue of more than Rs. 50 lakhs annually from Customs; and the growth in assessed taxes would be about R7 lakhs per annum prior to the war, about R60 lakhs if figures for 1918-19 be taken. In regard to Railways also we have every reason to congratulate ourselves on account of the expansion of revenue, and the limits of expansion seem to me very wide and I look forward to a healthy growth without any inconvenience being caused to the people.

"Then, Sir, even taking the budget for 1918-19, I find about £33·8 millions budgetted for under the heads referred to by me as Imperial and under normal circumstances we could have looked to another 5 millions at least, 3½ under Customs and 1½ under Salt, because it must be remembered that against 4·8 salt estimates in 1916-17 the estimate is only £3·4 millions. The budget expenditure is £36 millions making full provision for an abnormal military expenditure of 29 millions; an increase of 9 millions over the former expenditure; the previous rate of the growth of military expenditure was only £1 million in ten years. Therefore, Sir, you will find that it is possible that from true Imperial revenue you will be able to finance various undertakings which the Provincial Governments have in hand after meeting Imperial expenditure, but even if my estimates are unnecessarily and unduly optimistic, there is not the slightest shadow of a doubt that the two can be made to adjust one another without leaving an undesirable minus balance. But assuming for argument sake that it may not be possible to do so, I am sure that the deficits are capable of adjustment by contribution from the Provincial governments I, therefore, submit that the various grounds I have urged of administrative convenience, economic and financial, efficiency ought to suffice to induce the Council and the Government to agree with me in my proposals that the land-revenue should be wholly provincialised."

11-45 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" Sir, it was rather curious to learn from the opening remarks of my Hon'ble friend's speech that the people of India had assembled en masse in the recent National Congress in Calcutta. I believe the Congress was fairly well attended, but I am not aware that millions of the people of India came there; if they did it was ample justification for the measures taken by my Hon'ble Colleague, Sir George Barnes, to restrict the demand on the scanty railway stock! The Hon'ble Member also talked about federalising India, and used analogies drawn from the United States, Canada, Germany, and so forth. But federalising in these cases meant bringing together in close union States which had hitherto been independent, or largely independent, of each other. The scheme which my friend has in mind for India is quite a different one: it is splitting up what is at present a well-defined entity. He wants to give larger powers to Provincial Governments and so forth and make them autonomous—to use the term which is dear to my friend Mr Surendra Nath Bannerjea. Well, I have nothing to say against that, but you cannot put it on the same analogy as the federal systems which have grown up historically in the large federal States with which we are acquainted.

"I think my Hon'ble friend tabled his Resolution before I had made my speech on the Financial Statement, stating that we have under consideration, for application after the war is over and in connection with the scheme of constitutional reforms, a material advance in the direction of separating Imperial and Provincial finance which will give the Provinces larger and more independent resources and further powers of supplementing these by taxation when such may be found necessary. The matter is, therefore, already under consideration, and while the war lasts such a Resolution as my Hon'ble friend has put forward is quite academic. I think the Council will agree with me that it is impossible, while the war lasts, to diminish our Imperial resources in any way.

"Then as to the future settlements, my Hon'ble friend spoke rather lightly of the Imperial Government surrendering the land-revenue and the major irrigation revenue. As he quite rightly recognised, the connection between the two heads is so intimate that if land-revenue is provincialised, major irrigation will have to follow. At present the Government of India derive, speaking in round figures, £12 millions a year from these two heads, and I cannot share the light-heartedness with which my Hon'ble friend tackles the proposal. He seems to think that by some adjustments here and there we can do without this great sum; but I am sure it would be impossible. He quoted figures for 1916-17, which do not take into account—naturally, because it was before the event—the 6 millions a year with which we are now charged by reason of our war contribution and in which the military figures are much less than they are now. My Hon'ble friend says 'you will be able to cut down the military figures hereafter.' I do not know. Another Hon'ble Member said in effect the other day 'spend millions more on the army.' I do not know whether my Hon'ble friend's pacific sentiments will be approved by the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea and other Members of this Council. In any case, it is quite impossible for us to say now to what extent our military expenditure will be capable of reduction when peace returns, and it is perfectly impossible when peace does return that the Government of India should surrender without compensation some £12 million of revenue, That would absolutely hamper them in regard to the defence of the country, which must always be the primary consideration with them. It will be necessary, therefore, to imperialise some of the heads that are now divided: Income-tax, for example, my Hon'ble friend suggests; or, as he also suggests, we might divide up Stamps and make commercial Stamps wholly Imperial. It would also be necessary besides that (as I think he said the people of India in Calcutta assembled decided) that there should be lump contributions from the Provinces. The Provinces would get the benefit of the whole of the land-revenue and of other growing heads, and, besides other adjustments, they would each have to pay a certain amount to the Government of India for purposes of defence. Well, it is by no means an easy matter to adjust these contributions. We may get rid of a certain amount of friction by having no divided heads; but you will certainly have friction, I am afraid, in other directions, over lump contributions. My Hon'ble friend referred, I think, to the analogy of Germany. He is probably aware that in years gone by there was very considerable friction between the Central and the State Governments there as regards what are called the matricular contributions.

"But I recognise that in accordance with the scheme which I adumbrated in my speech on the 1st of March it is necessary to advance very materially in the separation of Imperial and Provincial finances, so that the Provincial Governments can get more real financial powers than they have hitherto obtained, and I would also remind those of my Hon'ble friends who chafe at the restrictions which the Government of India now impose on the Provinces that in most cases those restrictions are likewise imposed on us by the Secretary of State. So that if you are going to have any material advance in the direction of Provincial autonomy there must be decentralisation in Downing Street as well as in Simla.

"I do not wish to follow my Hon'ble friend into his examination of the financial possibilities. I think I have said enough to show that this re-casting of the Provincial settlements, which his Resolution would involve, and which in any case we are going to undertake, must be a difficult task which cannot be undertaken lightly, and which requires a great deal of detailed consideration. I may say, however, that we have put a provisional scheme before the Provinces—and even that provisional scheme cost us a great deal of time and trouble to work out—and we are now getting their replies. When we come to a provisional decision on those replies the main lines of the future financial development will be a part of the scheme of constitutional reforms which, as His Excellency the Viceroy informed the Council the other day, will be published for general information and give opportunities for public criticism.

"Well, I cannot for these reasons accept the Resolution in the form in which it stands, but I would be willing to accept an amended Resolution, somewhat in this form:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that in revised financial arrangements, with the Provinces consequent on a scheme of constitutional reforms, the question of wholly provincialising the land-revenue be taken into consideration.'

"To a Resolution in that form I say I could assent."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I have only one or two observations to make. I quite realise, and have always realised, that there is a difference between the United States or the German States coming together into a federal confederacy, and India. This is because we have here the inestimable advantage of always having had a unitary government, a government which, at present, is in possession of all the revenues of the country, and, consequently, intricate and delicate questions of adjustment would not arise in this country in the manner in which they have arisen in the United States or Germany. Apart from that, and apart from the control which may be retained, there seems to me in substance no difference in the principles we are advocating and the federal system which obtains in other countries.

"The only other observation which I have to make is that my Hon'ble friend overlooked the fact that I quoted the figures for 1918-19, also including the interest and the Sinking Fund charges. I think the revenues and the expenditure can be made to balance one another. The Hon'ble Member was right in saying that I sent up this Resolution before I knew that the matter was receiving consideration. Of course, I realise that the Government is not in a position to state more at present, and I accept the suggestion of the Hon'ble the Finance Member, and I would be prepared to move a Resolution in the form suggested by him if the Council and you, Sir, permit me to do so."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I have nothing before me yet. If the Hon'ble Member can give me something to put to the Council I shall be pleased to do so."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor-General in Council that in revised financial arrangements with the Provinces, consequent on a scheme of constitutional reforms, the question of wholly provincialising the land-revenue be taken into consideration.'

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I understand that the Resolution in that form will be accepted by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble the Vice President:—"As the Resolution is accepted I do not propose to put it to the Council unless any Member wishes it formally put."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur:—"I would like to know the nature of the amended Resolution which has been accepted."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I am sorry I did not catch the beginning of the Hon'ble Member's remarks."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur:—"I would like to know the nature of the amended Resolution which has been accepted."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has read it once to the Council, and I have no doubt he will have the courtesy to read it again."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that in revised financial arrangements with the Provinces, consequent on a scheme of constitutional reforms, the question of wholly provincialising the land-revenue be taken into consideration.'

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I would remind the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur and other Members of the Council that they are entitled to object to this amendment if they choose to do so. If no Member objects, and the amendment is accepted by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer, I do not see that anything is gained by putting it to the vote."

RESOLUTION RE INTRODUCTION OF FREE AND COMPULSORY EDUCATION AFTER THE WAR.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution:— 11-57 A. M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that one of the post-war reforms should be the introduction throughout British India of free and compulsory primary education immediately after the war.'

"With your permission, Sir, I would like to speak to the next Resolution also and ask you whether it would be convenient to put them separately in order to save time."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"Certainly"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.—"The other portion reads thus:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that if the land-revenue be not wholly provincialised, the Government of India should undertake to finance free and compulsory primary education out of Imperial revenues.'

"Well, this is a hardy annual, which makes its appearance once every year; but the subject is of such practical importance that Hon'ble Members will excuse me if I intend drawing their attention once again to the subject, which has so far received but indifferent and inadequate recognition at the hands of the authorities. I do not quarrel with the immediate present, because I realise that the embarrassments of the war have prevented any larger attention being paid to the subject; but, I think, we are entitled to a definite pronouncement of policy on this large question, especially in view of the important world developments which have been taking place during the last few years, and also in view of the changes which are likely to come over the Indian administration. I am aware, Sir, that His Excellency the Viceroy has been pleased to announce that the Government have under contemplation a policy whereby this intricate question will be handled by them to the satisfaction of the people, and I am also aware that about Rs. 30 lakhs have been granted to the Provincial Governments for the purpose of more adequately financing primary education than would have been otherwise possible. I note the infinite satisfaction with which the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair reviewed the figures of the last nine years in support of his contention that the Government are, perhaps, not altogether remiss in this matter. But I hope to be able to convince the Council on a review of both the financial as well as the educational figures that neither from the point of view of numbers nor of quality have we reason really to congratulate ourselves upon what has been done, and perhaps the people of this country will not be wrong if they complain that a much more rapid advance has not been possible I do not intend to deal to-day at length with the general aspects of the question. Last year much of what could be said really was said, and the Hon'ble Members in review of the Financial Statement, have made, I am very glad to note, pointed allusion to the need for development in this direction. I also note, and thankfully, the cordial and unanimous support of all the non-official Members on the last occasion when a somewhat similar question was raised, especially in view of the doubts which were felt by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair as to what the attitude of the Indian Members would be in regard to it. My justification for bringing up this Resolution is, that there are two or three important events which have occurred since I last moved the Resolution in which I pleaded for a scheme of financing primary education in a definite period. The Home Government, we all gratefully acknowledge, has distinctly promised that self-government is to be the goal of Indian administration, and we are at present engaged in the difficult task of settling the particular rate at which progress can be evolved during the next few years. Well, whatever may be the changes immediately ahead of us,

there cannot be the slightest doubt that we are in for a democratic form of government, and I do not think that any very lengthy reasoning is necessary to show that we shall have to educate our future masters. That alone is a sufficient reason for putting the educational problem in the forefront of our administrative problems—perhaps only next to the military problem. I have been very much struck by a book which was recently published in which the industrial efficiency of the American and the Britisher was compared, and it was shown there that with the improved machinery employed in several American industries, one American is able to turn out three times as much work as a Britisher. What the relative rates of efficiency as between the Indian and the European are, I need hardly dwell upon here. Both the Industrial Commission and those engaged in agriculture have insisted, and rightly too, upon primary education being immediately extended throughout India if there is to be any proper extension of the right agricultural methods or industrial development. Thus industrial efficiency, agricultural efficiency, the needs of self-government, the rapid rate at which other countries are competing with us, the new war problems whereby perhaps we might be brought into some sort of commercial union with other countries which may be a source of peril to us from the economic point of view unless our industrial and economic efficiency can be raised to the level of that of the countries with which we may be brought into union—all these and many more reasons may be cited for asking the Government to pay a little more attention than has been found possible in the past. Hon'ble Members might perhaps think that there has been an increased expenditure of 149 lakhs during the last four years from Provincial revenues; but that was not on primary education alone, but on education in general, and there has been an expenditure of about 94 lakhs only from municipal and local boards revenues; an increase of about 1 million pupils in primary schools is then relied on. But, Sir, one point seems to have been overlooked, and that is this. With all the advance that has been made during the past seven years ending in 1916-1917, we have not been able to overtake the growth of population. Taking the normal growth of 5·5 in population, you find that there has been an increase among children of school-going age of 1·7 million, whereas the number of pupils in schools rose from 4·6 to 5·8, that is 1·2 million. Of course I know that the figures for girls are included therein. Still I am perfectly justified in stating that, although the ratio of the boys educated to the population has risen relatively, we have not even overtaken the population growth, and that with an increased expenditure of over 94 lakhs. We know how inelastic provincial revenues are. At the present rate how long will it take to educate our people to the level obtaining in all civilised countries? It has been said that in various provinces Bills have been introduced, and the Government have so far kept themselves in touch with public opinion as to sanction the introduction and in some case the passing of such Bills—Bills which make it possible for local bodies and municipalities to provide, where they are willing, funds for the compulsory and free elementary education of pupils. But my trouble is, Sir, that these are but mere palliatives: they will not solve the question properly unless the Government of India is willing to undertake the moral and the financial responsibility in the matter. Our land-revenue is 36 crores; and even assuming for argument sake that an additional half-an-anna cess can be levied in all the provinces you will not be able to get more than a crore of rupees. Taking it that the Government will provide twice that amount, the net revenue provided will be only between 3 and 4 crores, whereas even taking the 10 per cent. standard and accepting the position that only half the number of girls of school-going age can be reached, you will have to provide for about 18 millions pupils, and it would be absolutely impossible to make adequate financial provision unless there is a change of outlook—a change in the point of view from which the Government look at this problem, and until they give up the laissez faire policy and a policy of looking to small developments here and there whenever and wherever possible. The real question is, can we afford to be overtaken in the race by other races; and is not the industrial serfdom which is at present our lot going to be perpetuated if we allow Japan and other countries, European as well as Asiatic, to become industrially and educationally efficient, while the Government of India looks to the consent of the people being obtained in the distant future under proper checks and safeguards before proceeding in this matter? I do not mean it to be understood when I move this Resolution that I think the Government would be justified in undertaking this task if in any locality there should be danger of creating political unrest and discontent. I have not specified or alluded to the limitations in this Resolution, because I felt it would be making it too cumbrous to introduce the qualifications always implied. I also know that it would be impossible for the Government to force the education of girls against the wishes of the people; but the rapid rate at which girls' education has been advancing, and the circumstance that nobody would object to his boys being educated provided he is not asked to pay when he is not able to do so, make it easy for the Government to extend rapidly primary education. The only question is have they the finances to do so? But before I deal with it, let me dispose of a few objections which are generally raised.

"The Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair in dealing with a similar application of mine last year gave various reasons for asking the Council to reject my Resolution. One of them was that Mr. Gokhale was satisfied with local boards taking up this task whereas I asked for much more. The world has advanced considerably since the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale advanced his proposals, and besides that, Mr. Gokhale knew the difficulties he had to contend against and was therefore only desirous of introducing the thin end of the wedge then by inducing the Government to accept the principle. What was an impossibility then the Government have been forced by public opinion to accept as a possibility now. The whole world is moving much more rapidly, and we cannot rest content with the Government's passive attitude relying on slow developments. That is my answer to that part of the question. Is there a popular demand? The way in which the Government answer on the last occasion was taken up by the press and the people at large and by the various associations, and the way in which legislative Members rallied to my support on the last occasion are proof positive that the country is fully alive to the importance of the problem.

"Then a word, Sir, with regard to the voluntary principle which has been preached ad nauseam by the Government and their advocates. Now, two propositions have been put forward in support of it and they are these. First of all we have not got enough funds to found schools where people are willing to send their children, and consequently there is no use in asking for free and compulsory education. I shall presently deal with it. The second is, that the quality has to be improved before we can look to the quantity. Taking the quality question, I humbly submit that that very point is a strong argument in favour of my contention that, unless free and compulsory education is the order of the day, you can never improve the quality. You find that not even half the number of boys from the lower standard go up to the higher standard, and that the number of boys who are able to read books after passing through this primary course is indeed a very small fraction of the number of boys whose names appear on the rolls. What is the reason? The reason is not so much inefficiency of teaching as has been supposed; that the people are unable to pay for their education is only partly a reason and consequently some sort of compulsion would have to be employed where the people possibly do not know their interests rightly. I quoted on the last occasion a number of figures in support of my proposition that the number of pupils proceeding to the higher classes is but a very small fraction of what we should expect it to be. The number of pupils in the upper primary class in 1910-11 was 605,000 and in 1914-15 it was 596,000, and it was found that the number of pupils who could read from books was 3·2 millions and 3·5 millions or ¼ million more only for that period. You will thus see that notwithstanding the large figures which appear as being at school as five and six millions those that were receiving real education are very, very few indeed, and it is impossible to accomplish the task we have before us unless a form of compulsion is used, and further education in the higher forms is imparted. The whole question is really one of finance as has been admitted on more than one occasion by responsible members of the Government. Now, Sir, I humbly submit that unless extraordinary unforeseen circumstances intervene the recent development in the growth of revenue is ample justification for my approaching the Council with the suggestion that the finances can amply meet my request that free and compulsory education should be imparted throughout British India. The Hon'ble the Finance Minister speaking on the previous Resolution has said we do not know where the military problem will land us; it is too soon yet to say what the expenditure will be, and consequently we can only be revelling in imaginary figures and be doing no useful task if we are to lay down any definite rate of programme in any direction before the war is over. It is because I have some fears that unless the Government is induced by the people to put this subject in the forefront of their programme, it is the fear that the difference between the expenditure and the normal revenue would be utilised for perhaps unnecessary purposes, which may be very justifiable from a moral point of view, but which the administrative conditions of this country do not permit, it is because I fear that that I have brought up this Resolution. Now, no one can say that the growth of revenue during the last few years does not justify the expenditure of be it even eight or ten million pounds a year on the extension of primary education. We have increased the gross revenue from 82 millions in 1913-14 to 110 millions in 1917-18 (revised estimate) or by about 28 million pounds or forty-two crores of rupees. Of course some portion of it would have to go towards interest charges, but even when you deduct all those charges you find a large surplus; there is at least four to seven million growth in customs; you will find under railways there is an enormous growth, and you will find there is a growth under income-tax. Putting these three alone together we find there is a growth of about fifteen and a half million pounds; and so far the permanent expenditure under the Army has been increased, if I am not wrong, only by one million pounds and even if the improvements which the Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea, has asked for be given, they would not come to about more than a crore of rupees, and would perhaps be much less than that. Assuming that another two or three million pounds would be required by the Military Department my submission is the finances of the country do permit of large expenditure towards education being made from Imperial revenues. Inasmuch as we take from the people a large portion of their substance in the shape of Imperial revenue, it would be unreasonable for us to expect them to fleece themselves more by imposing upon themselves local and provincial burdens. You will have to lighten the taxation here if you expect the provincial and local taxes to yield more. Secondly, Sir, I think that the Imperial revenues do justify the wide departure at the present moment in the desired direction, for two reasons, firstly, because it is impossible to tackle the problem if you leave the problem to be solved by local bodies or even by provincial councils unless land-revenue is provincialised in the manner I have suggested, and, secondly, because the financial resources at present existing would permit of the expenditure of large sums of money upon primary education. It is for these reasons that I have brought forward this Resolution at the present juncture notwithstanding the embarrassments which the Government find themselves exposed to, as the reforms are only to take effect after the war. Therefore I hope that the Hon'ble the Education Member would be in a position to accept this modest Resolution of mine which is absolutely needed in the interests of the people whose welfare he and the Government have at heart."

12-21 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair:—"Sir, before dealing with the Resolution itself I shall say only a word or two with reference to the general remarks made by my Hon'ble friend. I do not think it was necessary for him to dwell at such length on the value of mass education in the interests of national efficiency. I do not think there is any dispute between him, his friends and the Government on that point; nor do I think it was quite right or fair to the Government to say that we were not bestowing sufficient attention to the subject; we are devoting to it as much attention as we possibly can. I can assure him that the question is always before us, and we are always considering what we can do for the extension of education in India.

" The Resolution put forward by the Hon'ble Mover is much the same in substance as that which he moved last year. He then wished us to draw up a scheme whereby primary education should be made universal, compulsory and free throughout British India within a period of 15 years, to be introduced as soon as possible after the termination of the war. He has now left out the period. He now asks us to introduce free and compulsory education throughout British India immediately after the war. So far as there is any change in the wording of his Resolution, it is in the direction of an earlier introduction of compulsion. We were unable to accept his Resolution last year; and, if we were unable to accept that Resolution then, we are still more unable to accept his present Resolution now. Even if his object be as it was last year that we should introduce a scheme of compulsory education immediately after the war, the actual completion of which might be delayed for some years, even then I could not accept it. Supposing he had merely stated that our aim should be a system of free and compulsory education, just as he wished us the other day to declare our ultimate aim in excise matters to be compulsory temperance, then I might have been ready in this case to agree with him. He does not, however, put forward his scheme as an ideal, but as one to be introduced immediately after the war, and this is a form in which I cannot accept the Resolution.

" Now, I gave my reasons last year for objecting to the introduction after the war of any general scheme of compulsory education. Those reasons still hold good. We are not prepared to introduce compulsion, but we are prepared to do all we can to extend the existing system of primary education. We have, in fact, considerably extended it in the last few years. As I pointed out in my remarks on Saturday last, the number of pupils has extended considerably during the last few years, and we believe that in the present year we shall have more than 8 million persons at school. Some Members appeared to have doubts as to the expansion of primary education, and the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur complained the other day that there were only 31,000 primary schools in Bengal, and that consequently the distribution of schools in that Province was poor. He took the last figures available, but from figures which were placed on the table on Saturday he will see that the number of boys' primary schools in Bengal is now over 32,000, while the addition of girls' primary schools brings the total up to nearly 42,000. As a matter of fact, schools are situated remarkably near together in Bengal. There is one school for every 1·88 sq. miles. Nor do the figures of primary schools give the full truth; for the secondary schools educate a number of primary pupils—in Bengal alone over 212,000 are so educated in secondary schools. The Government of India has, in fact, as I pointed out last Saturday, continued in an increasing degree to spend money on education, and especially on primary education. As I stated, the amount spent on education last year was 468 lakhs, this year it is 502 lakhs and next year we expect it to be over 616 lakhs. So far from being a decrease in expenditure, as some Hon'ble Members seem to imply, there has been progressive increase, and the increase in the budget for next year is by no means entirely due to the provision of 30 lakhs which we are making from Imperial funds. The increase takes place in the budgets of all the Provinces independently of our grant. Both last year and this year the Government of India have singled out Education as the object of special grants. The grant made last year—a recurring grant of 30 lakhs—was made for the purpose of improving the training and pay of teachers—the teachers very largely of primary schools; and the recurring grant of 30 lakhs which we are giving this year is to be devoted entirely to primary education. I do not think that any one can say that the Government of India has been lacking in its solicitude for the cause of primary education.

"But the Hon'ble Members say we must have compulsion. Well, if you apply full compulsion everywhere, as the Hon'ble Member apparently proposes to do, you are undertaking a colossal task. Apart from other objections, we cannot raise the money necessary for maintaining it. Any scheme for the general introduction at an early date of compulsory education would be impossible.

"My Hon'ble friend says that we shall have ample funds after the war for universal and compulsory education. My remarks on this point will be general. As he knows, Mr. Gokhale calculated the cost of educating the boys between 6 and 10 at 4½ crores. That was shown to be a serious underestimate, and the cost is much more likely to be 7 or 8 crores, and indeed a scheme of this kind could scarcely be carried out without ultimately landing us in some 10 or 12 crores of annual expenditure. Can we expect to get this money or anything like it immediately after the war? The local bodies may pay a share but that does not help us very far; as, roughly speaking, the same persons are taxed whether for local funds or for Government. Hon'ble Members saw with what difficulty the Finance Member was able to give provisional hopes for additional grants this year for technical education and for sanitation, grants of a comparatively small figure which cannot stand comparison with the huge sums which a universal scheme of compulsion would entail. What the Finance Member would be able to do after the war, I cannot tell; but I may safely say that neither he nor the Provincial Governments would be in a position to meet for many years anything like the expenditure involved by the Hon'ble Member's proposal.

"Mr. Gokhale recognised this and so he introduced his modified scheme of compulsion. He wanted to give the authorities in charge of certain local areas in which education had reached a certain point a power to introduce compulsion in those areas. This was a very different thing from introducing general compulsion throughout India. We had our objections, however, to the scheme put forward by Mr. Gokhale, and we explained these objections when his Bill was before this Council. One reason why the scheme did not satisfy us is, that under a scheme of this kind the expansion of education must be very uneven and must make the greatest progress in the particular areas where education is already most advanced; which is just the opposite of what we should ourselves wish to aim at. We look to the introduction at some time of a system of compulsory education throughout the country, but we must decline to introduce general compulsion at the present time. Once we can bring a large tract of country into a state of comparatively forward education, the course will become more clear. Mr. Montagu pointed out in the House of Commons in 1912, compulsion really can only be asked where education is popular and where, therefore, the need of putting compulsion into force would not show itself to the very large bulk of the population. We are endeavouring to extend education through large tracts of country and this, we believe, we can do on the present voluntary system. We believe that it is quite possible to effect an enormous extension without resort to compulsion and we hope, when the war is over or possibly before that, to be able to put in hand some measures for effecting a more rapid expansion of primary education than that which we are able to effect at present. We have been considering the possibility of a plan which would provide for a financial programme for the expansion of primary education, without giving to future progress that uneven and unfair character which Mr. Gokhale's scheme necessarily entailed. Unfortunately just as our programme was getting into shape, the whole question of the financial relations between the Government of India and the Local Governments and the whole question of the future control of primary education was raised

(and necessarily raised) in connection with the scheme of reforms. It was impossible for us to produce our scheme while these matters were still under discussion, and we are unable, therefore, to explain at present what the scheme which we had in view was, and, until we know more accurately the form which our general plans are to take, it is impossible to say when we shall be in a position to explain as the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma wants what our scheme was. In the meantime, we have done the best we can to further such progress as can be made in the desired direction. We have ourselves provided a further liberal grant of 30 lakhs this year for the expansion of primary education on the voluntary system, and we have given full liberty to local legislatures to introduce Bills on the lines of Mr. Gokhale's measure.

"We are also ready to allow the further employment of compulsion on the limited lines suggested by Mr. Gokhale when there is a demand for it. We have done this in direct pursuance of the suggestion which was made by Sir Harcourt Butler when Mr. Gokhale's Bill was under discussion. An Act has, as Hon'ble Members know, been passed for the introduction of compulsion in municipalities in Bombay. Arrangements have been made for the introduction of similar Bills in Bengal and in Bihar and Orissa. A Bill on the same subject has been drafted by the Punjab Government and published for criticism. To all this we have given our assent, and we expect that further Bills will be forthcoming from other Provinces. All this, however, is a very different thing from what the Hon'ble Member is asking for, and we are not prepared to accept any proposal such as that which he puts forward, and which involves a general introduction of compulsion throughout British India after the war. With these remarks I oppose the Resolution."

12-34 P. M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"Sir, in rising to support the Resolution which has been moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma, I must express my extreme disappointment at the speech which has just been delivered by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair. The Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair has taken Mr. Sarma to task for being a little too impatient. He wants him and he wants everyone of us to ask the Government to keep the question of compulsory primary education as an ideal to be realised sometime in the distant future. Sir, I feel very strongly..........."

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair:—"I did not say distant future."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"As an ideal in the future. Sir, I feel very strongly on that subject, and I must say that the time has gone by when the question of primary education could be treated as a mere question of ideal. I think the time has come when the Government should recognise their duty in this matter frankly, boldly and courageously. It will not do for the Government to take credit for having authorised local legislatures to introduce measures relating to primary education, nor will it do for the Government to refer with any degree of pride to the amount of Rs. 30 lakhs which has been allowed this year or to similar grants, nor will it do for the Government to say that the number of scholars has increased in some Provinces. Now, take a Province like the United Provinces, with a population of 48 millions and take also the figures which were supplied to us the other day by the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp. Can it be said with any degree of pride that it is a very satisfactory condition for a Province like the United Provinces to be only higher than Baluchistan in the matter of primary education. Sir, as one belonging to the United Provinces, I cannot feel proud of that state of things. Sir, it has also been said that so far as the question of compulsion is concerned, Mr. Gokhale proceeded very cautiously in regard to this matter in his Bill and in the famous speech which he delivered in this Council. May I be permitted to remind the Council that Mr. Gokhale was the pioneer of this subject, and he wanted to save the Government from the rude shock of the new idea at that time? But, I should think that eight years' time is a sufficiently long time even for the Government to get themselves reconciled to the present question, and I venture to think that the rate of progress which has been maintained during the last seven or eight years is by no means adequate, having regard to the size of the country or having regard to the pressure of the demand on the part of the people in this country. I certainly cannot congratulate the Government in the same spirit in which the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair congratulated the Government or his own Department with regard to the progress that has been made in the matter of education. I do think that my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma has done a service by raising an issue of this character on the present occasion, and I also respectfully submit that it is not right to expect the local bodies with their embarrassed finances everywhere to make further progress unless they are liberally assisted in this matter by the Imperial Government. We have to press this question upon the attention of the Imperial Government, unless we know what exactly will be the condition of the Provincial Governments after the reforms. I cannot anticipate the decision of Government on that matter, but until the present state of things lasts, I think it is our duty to press this question upon the Government and it is the duty of the Government to be more liberal than they have been in the past, and not take credit for only what they have done so far."

2-39 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri:—"Sir, I must apologise to the Council for coming late and venturing to speak on an imperfect appreciation of the points put before the Council by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair. I thought I heard him say that Mr. Gokhale's Bill was imperfect inasmuch as under it the more forward areas would have been helped in preference to the more backward areas. In other words, it enabled the municipalities which were already well advanced in education to take advantage of its provisions and make further progress while the rural areas would still remain where they were. If that is the meaning of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair's criticism of Mr. Gokhale's Bill, I venture to think it is somewhat misplaced and out of keeping with the general line of policy adopted by Government in all other matters. This criticism, Sir, is opposed radically to the very principle upon which the grant-in-aid system is based. The grant-in-aid system has been adopted as the system upon which all further progress in educational matters is to be made. Now, what is the central principle of the grant-in-aid system? Government says we will give a rupee to everybody who is able to raise a rupee for himself. Now those who help themselves, that is to say, those who have some power already, those who are able to make some progress already, will be enabled by Government to make further progress. Is the principle to be given the go-by in the matter of free and compulsory education? But it is not only, Sir, in respect of education that the Government adopt the principle of grant-in-aid. There is the whole method of aiding municipalities in the matter of water-supply and in the matter of public works. You tell the municipalities in general that every municipality that wants water works for themselves and tax themselves to the extent of half the cost of any scheme that Government may sanction, will get from Government a similar amount. You do not go and say, 'well the backward municipalities shall be the first which Government will assist; when every backward municipality which cannot help itself shall have got its free and protected water supply, we will then come and think of those that can raise half the money for it.' On the contrary, Government says 'we will give help to those municipalities that can help themselves; municipalities that are already fairly well able to maintain themselves, they shall raise so much money and Government will give so much more money.' Now that system would no doubt widen the gap between the forward and the backward municipalities. Anyhow that is the system which the Government has hitherto worked on. Why that system should be condemned where free and compulsory education is concerned, I am not able to understand. Mr. Gokhale's scheme no doubt would have done that, but it would have gone on the lines already adopted by Government and recognised as sound in all legislation. Now we may ask why Government helps those that can help themselves. It is a simple matter, one effect of which is known to all who are practically concerned with the work of administration. The great virtue of the grant-in-aid system is that it enables Government to see that public funds are properly expended. Municipalities and local boards have a certain amount of independence given to them. Government no doubt exercises control, but it increases its control, makes it more minute and searching whenever it gives some grant-in-aid to a well-recognised object. It then imposes conditions, and through that means Government have been able to obtain a certain amount of control and the power of improving certain services and seeing that the people are well served. I think, Sir, the grant-in-aid system has done wonders for this country, and I hope nothing that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair has said in his criticism of this Bill will be understood to violate this central principle and impair the virtue of this system."

12-45 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea :—"Sir, I must confess to a sense of disappointment at the reply which has been given by Government in regard to the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend. That Resolution says 'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that one of the post-war reforms should be the introduction throughout British India of free and compulsory primary education immediately after the war.' I think what is uppermost in the mind of my friend, and I believe that is the feeling of most of us here, I mean the non-official Indian Members, is that primary education, free and compulsory primary education, should be regarded as part and parcel of the post-war reforms. Sir, we are looking forward to a responsible electorate; we are looking forward to industrial development and industrial efficiency. For both these purposes I venture to assert that primary education is the first, the foremost, the most indispensible condition. If you want a responsible electorate, that electorate would best do its duty if it were more or less literate. If you want industrial development, you would secure industrial efficiency if the artizan and other people engaged in our industries were literate. Therefore, it seems to me that the question of constitutional reforms which will be uppermost immediately after the war, is indissolubly bound up with the question of primary education, free and compulsory. I think it is an artificial, unnatural division to separate the one from the other; the two are indissolubly linked up together; they act and re-act upon each other and strengthen each other by their mutual interaction. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri has referred to the municipalities and the financial ability of the municipalities to help forward the cause of primary education. Well, Sir, I happen to be associated with a municipality in Bengal and have been so associated for the last 35 years, and I can say this that, unless the Provincial Government or the Imperial Government is able to come forward with funds, it would be a hopeless task for a municipality, such as my municipality is, and other municipalities in the same condition (and they form the majority), to carry out this great reform of primary education, free and compulsory. Therefore, Sir, I take it that it is necessary that the Provincial Governments should come to the help of this cause, and that the Imperial Government should be at the back of the Provincial Government in this matter. It is a supreme duty, a paramount duty which the country demands and insists upon, and the country looks upon it as part and parcel of those great constitutional reforms upon which we have set our heart. If you want these constitutional reforms to succeed, you cannot possibly succeed in full measure unless and until you extend primary education and compulsory education, and unless intellectually, morally and industrially you equip your people for the great task which is before them."

12-48 P. M.

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya :—"Sir, if the Hon'ble the Education Member had merely contented himself with saying that a scheme for extending primary education throughout the country would be produced at the end of the war or later on, I think many of us would have felt more satisfaction than we do at present. There is no doubt that the Resolution recommends the introduction of free and compulsory education immediately after the war. We can realise that, for the reasons given by the Hon'ble Member, and for the reasons stated by His Excellency the Viceroy at the opening Session, the Government may not be in a position at present to put forward a definite scheme, but we want to be assured, Sir, and we feel that the matter is of such importance that there should be an assurance that a scheme for the general expansion of primary education on a sufficiently large scale is being really prepared. There are two or three objections that were urged by the Hon'ble Member which require to be noted. He pointed out that at the end of the war there will not be sufficient money available to promote education in the manner suggested by the Resolution. Ten or twelve crores a year was the amount estimated to be necessary for the purpose. I never thought, Sir, that anybody suggested that ten or twelve crores of rupees should be spent all at once from the beginning of the very first year after the war. I expect that in any scheme of general primary education, there would be a graduated scale, that it would be worked out in the course of a certain number or years, and that the demand on the public exchequer would not be so very heavy at the outset as to make it impossible to be met. In other countries where primary education has been introduced, it has been introduced in a graduated manner. This is what we look for in India, but we want to know that such a scheme is in contemplation, and that the period which has been fixed for attaining the object which the Hon'ble the Education Member has rightly said should be a period of years, that the period which has been fixed is not an unduly long period. In this matter, Sir, as I have said more than once before, the people of India have been in a peculiarly unfortunate position. The need for extending primary education was pointed out in this country long before such need was recognised even in England. In England, the Primary Education Act was introduced about 1870. In India, so long ago as 1845, the question of extending education to the mass of the people was taken up, Parliament considered it and approved it, and a scheme was embodied in the Education Despatch of 1854. Since then, we have had on numerous occasions very eloquent expressions of the sympathy of the Government to the masses of the people and of their desire to extend such education. But, unfortunately, the sympathy has not been translated sufficiently into action. From the time that the Government recognised the need of extending elementary education among the masses, the Government revenue has expanded like anything. Sums, enormous sums, have been found for expenditure on general administration, on the Army and on every other subject which the Government thought it fit to spend money upon; but education has not received its proper share, and I submit, Sir, that what we want to be sure of is, that the Government should even now recognise more fully than they have done in the past that this matter of primary education has to be practically carried into effect.

"The Hon'ble the Education Member resented the remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and indicated that there was a want of appreciation on our part of the efforts which have been made by Government in this direction. I should be very sorry to think that any one of us failed to appreciate the effort. We are grateful for what has been done. But we must point out—it is our duty both to the Government and to the people to point out—that what has been done is very inadequate as compared with what requires to be done. Therefore, I sumbit that, while we recognise all the difficulties that have been referred to by the Hon'ble Member, the Government ought to prepare a scheme and put it forward at the earliest opportunity before the Council and the public in order that we should feel that the matter is going to be dealt with in a bolder, in a more comprehensive and a more definite manner than it has been dealt with in the past.

" I think I must add just a few words in reference to Mr. Gokhale's Bill. I have no doubt that the Hon'ble Education Member was the last person not to appreciate the importance of the work undertaken by Mr. Gokhale. But I fear that when he spoke of the disadvantages of that Bill and of its proposals, he did not give sufficient weight to the fact that all that Mr. Gokhale was seeking to do, was to introduce a measure which could expand in the course of time. He recognised that elementary education could not be introduced all over the country at once. He, therefore, proposed a very modest measure which, if it had been carried out, would have advanced the cause of education further than it has been carried during the past many years. Therefore, the criticism that, under his proposal, the progress of education would have been uneven and unfair is not quite just to his memory. Nobody recognised more fully, more frankly, than did Mr. Gokhale, the limitations under which all these schemes have to be worked. In view of those limitations, he suggested what to him appeared to be the best means of making a beginning. If that beginning had been made, we should have been much better off to-day than we are; but it is no good complaining of the time that has been lost. What we want is, that further time should not be lost, and, while we know that the Government, every member of the Government, including the Hon'ble the Education Member, must be very busy at present in considering the question of reforms, we hope that, when there is a little leisure available after this Session is over, that the Hon'ble the Education Member will prepare a scheme of compulsory elementary education which should be worked out in the course of a few years and which would require the expenditure of public funds on a graduated scale. We shall be deeply thankful if such a measure could be put forward before the Council at its next Session."

The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer :—" Sir, I should like to say a few words from the financial point of view. 12-55 P.M.

" My Hon'ble friend Sir Sankaran Nair has brought out clearly the magnitude of the expenditure to which the Hon'ble Member's Resolution invites us, and I say that it is quite impossible for us now to commit ourselves to any such outlay immediately after the war. The Hon'ble Mover spoke with his usual optimism as to the further resources we should have after the war. He talked of the growth of our Customs and Railway revenue. Let me remind him that our Customs revenue includes two items, the export duties on tea and jute, which were imposed as war measures and which will have to be reconsidered after the war is over. These bring in about 250 lakhs. Also it is quite impossible for the net profits on railways to continue after the war on the present scale with justice to the railways themselves. These large profits have been very welcome to us in our present financial condition, with the strain imposed on us by the heavy expenditure we have had to meet on account of His Majesty's Government and in other directions. But these profits have been made so large by the fact that it was impossible under war conditions to afford due assistance to the railways to keep their lines going, to make good the tremendous wear and tear there has been on the lines, to make good deficiencies in rolling stock, to get the fresh rolling stock that the increased traffic demands, and so on. I say that the railway profits of future years must be largely assigned to those objects Otherwise the railways will have been very badly treated, and we shall have complaints as to the inadequacy of traffic facilities, as to the overcrowding of third-class accommodation, and so on.

" Well, it has been suggested by the last speaker that if you cannot have a big programme at once, you could have a scheme that would begin modestly, and go on and on. You would have a heavier burden each year, but still each year you would shoulder it, like the man in the Greek mythology who began by carrying a little calf and finished up by carrying a gigantic bull, because every day he had taken a slightly heavier weight.

" Well, my Hon'ble friend the Education Member has given an answer to that. It is that we had a scheme of that sort in view, but it has had to be set aside by reason of the question of constitutional reforms. Constitutional reforms have come to the front at this stage. Now, one of the essentials of constitutional reforms is provincial autonomy and 'federalisation' as my Hon'ble friend the Mover called it in dealing with his last Resolution. In any scheme of federalism and in any scheme of provincial autonomy, Education must rest with the Local Governments and with the local legislatures. You can no longer lay down a policy in this Council or by the Governor General in Council which shall bind the Local Governments and the local legislàtures. If you do so, your provincial autonomy is a mockery. Therefore, the development of education will, in accordance with any such system, rest with the Local Governments and the Local Councils.

"My Hon'ble friend spoke a good deal about democracy. It may be that in some provinces a democracy would hasten rapidly with free and compulsory education. In other provinces the democracy might not be so anxious to hasten; they might prefer—perhaps very unwisely prefer—not to get educated so fast. Still under a democratic system, or an approach to a democratic system, you must give weight to their wishes.

"There was one sentence in the Hon'ble Mover's speech at which I pricked up my ears, when he said that people must be coerced if they did not know their interests rightly. Well, it struck me that I had come across a similar sentiment not long ago, and memory brought it back to me. It was a sentiment expressed by Mons. Lenin, the Bolshevik leader in Russia, when he found that a constituent assembly had been returned which did not have a Bolshevik majority, he dissolved it He said the people did not know their true interests, that they were perverse, and that he must govern them in spite of this assembly. I do not for a moment suggest that my Hon'ble friend would go so far as this; or even that when the provinces are redistributed according to his ideas, he would come down like a new Cromwell on the Andhra Parliament and say 'Remove this bauble!' But I do tell him that it is inconsistent to harp on provincial autonomy and on federalism, and at the same time to insist on an immediate programme of free and compulsory primary education which gives the Local Governments and the local bodies no option in the matter."

1-1 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Sharp:—"Sir, I am not going to discuss the general merits of this Resolution, but there are one or two things which have been said on which I thought that I might possibly throw a little light. They number only three and I shall be very brief.

"I understood the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to lament the fact that our slow progress in primary education was insufficient, or barely sufficient, to make up for the increase in population. What he said may be perfectly true, but I must point out one little matter which may be forgotten, and that is, that, owing to a change in the method of collecting our figures which had effect from 1914-15, something over 100,000 square miles, with—if I remember rightly—12 millions of population, were cut out from the figures of area and population which were included in our educational returns; and at least a third of a million pupils were cut out along with them. That is owing to the abolition of the anomalous system under which a certain number of the Native States sent in their returns to be compiled with those of British India. The anomaly was removed in the year 1914-15.

"The second point arises out of something which was said by the Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea, and, I think, also by the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru. It was said by those Hon'ble Members that the local bodies could not possibly finance free and compulsory education unless they had enormous subsidies from Imperial or Provincial resources. I think that it would be very difficult to deny that. But it may be just worth pointing out that the amount of aid which local bodies already receive for primary education from those resources is extremely large and comes, I think I am right in saying, to more than half the expenditure of the local bodies upon educational objects.

"The third point arises out of the speech of my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. Mr. Sastri criticised some comments which have been passed upon the late Mr. Gokhale's Bill and the possibly inequitable effects which it might have in spreading the benefits of primary education. Mr. Sastri instanced the case of a municipality and a local board area. I doubt whether it would be quite right to stop there. There are many districts, many sub-divisions, which show a peculiar rate of advancement, and where under any optional scheme of compulsion, such as was put forward by Mr. Gokhale, compulsion and its necessary corollary, free education, might be adopted under such an Act, to the detriment, I fear, of other and less advanced districts and sub-divisions and even villages and classes. The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri admired the system of grant-in-aid, and no doubt it has very many advantages. But I am doubtful whether that system is fully applicable as a principle to primary education. When we are dealing with primary education, we have to remember that our efforts must be directed to its spread, not merely among the more intelligent, the more fortunate, and the more advanced sections of the population. We also have to direct our efforts to the poorer sections of the population where we shall encounter many who are very poor, very helpless, and averse to the adoption, or perhaps even to the toleration, of any form of compulsion. Are we to apply here the doctrine that those must be helped who help themselves? I think that even in England the formula adopted by Mr. Fisher a short while ago for the granting of aid to the local educational authorities in England seems to mark a desire to modify the bare principle that 'To him that hath, shall be given.'

"There is another point arising out of this, and that is, that it is not always advantageous to apply the grant-in-aid system in detail to primary education. I have had a good deal of experience in going about different parts of India and looking into primary schools, and I have no hesitation in saying that, on the whole, the grant-in-aid system does not work so well in primary schools as does the board school system. And this has been recognised by others. At the beginning of 1911, we had an Educational Conference at Allahabad, at which, if I remember rightly, the late Mr. Gokhale was himself present; and it was most emphatically declared at that Conference that the board school system was superior to the aided system for primary education. For this reason, while I fully appreciate with the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri the advantages of the principle embodied in the grant-in-aid system, I should feel some hesitation in applying it without considerable modification to primary education."

1-10 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. K. Chanda :—" Sir, I should like to say one word only as I do not like to give a silent vote on this important, and to us momentous, Resolution. When we ask for self-government the answer we get is, that the people are illiterate, and therefore it cannot be granted. When we ask for universal education, we are met with the objection that it will cost a mint of money, and therefore it cannot be granted. That is our position. How are we to get out of this circle? As we all know, in 1880, the system of making education compulsory was completed in England and we know the result: cent. per cent. of the people are literate. About the same time, that is, in 1882, the Government of India resolved 'that an attempt should be made to secure the fullest possible provision for the expansion of primary education by selection suitable to the circumstances of each Province.' I have quoted the words of the Resolution.

"Now, what has been done since then? Are we any nearer the goal? I fear, Sir, that the speech of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair is only a paraphrase of the above Resolution, expressing a pious wish that that is the aim of Government and it will one day be reached. If the Government of India grapple with the problem manfully and courageously I have some hope; otherwise there is not much chance of our making any progress at all in the matter."

1-12 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Mazharul Haque :—" Sir, I am afraid the fate of this Resolution will be the normal fate of all Resolutions in this Council, it will be rejected. But there is absolutely no occasion or ground for pessimism on this question. I find that since the time that Mr. Gokhale brought his Bill in this Council there is a great change in the angle of vision of the Government of India, and I believe that that change is due to my Hon'ble friend, Sir Sankaran Nair; all honour to him for that change. Now, it is permissible to bring Bills in the Provincial Councils for free and compulsory elementary education. It was not so before the time of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair, and I believe that it is purely a question of time when Sir Sankaran Nair himself will bring a Bill in this Council to make elementary education free and compulsory throughout India. India is in need of free and compulsory elementary education. We are going to have constitutional reforms; at least they have been promised to us, and one of the moot points in those reforms, as alluded to by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea, is the creation of responsible electorates. People come forward, high officials, who say that there are no responsible electorates in India (I do not mean to say that any high official has said so in this Council, but it has been said outside this Council) and therefore it is difficult to grant responsible government to this country. Well, Sir, why have we not got responsible electorates in India? When we come and ask for elementary education, free and compulsory, in order that we may have responsible electorates, you say 'You shall not have free and compulsory education.' When we want responsible government, you say 'You have no responsible electorates' This is merely begging the question. The question can, I think, be solved by the Resolution which has been brought by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. I shall not take up the time of the Council any further beyond saying that I shall vote for Mr. Sarma's Resolution."

1-15 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—" Sir, anxious as we are, and strongly as we feel, that primary education should be made free and compulsory, perhaps on this occasion there would not have been this feeling which has been displayed by some Hon'ble Members if the Government had taken their stand on this point, namely, that they desired as earnestly as sincerely to make elementary education in this country free and compulsory as soon as possible, and as an earnest of it they also had a definite scheme which was prepared for that purpose, but that owing to what we all know, namely, the question of constitutional reforms, that is being considered now, it was not possible for them to accept this Resolution, and their scheme which they had prepared could not possibly be accomplished. Sir, what I feel is the arguments that were advanced by the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education and what was said particularly by the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp. I am quite sure that the Hon'ble Member in charge of the department, if he carefully considers, will come to the conclusion that some of the arguments, particularly the one which I am going to deal with, cannot possibly stand the test. That argument was this, that in those areas where you have got more advanced people, in other words, where you have a larger number of boys of school-going age, those areas should not be encouraged so much as the areas where you have got very little advance, such as in small districts and villages, and that that would be a more equitable way of dealing with this question. Now, Sir, as far as I have understood, and I believe the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale dealt with this point at the time he introduced his Bill. I understand that the very object of compulsion is this: that by the voluntary system you cannot get beyond a certain percentage unless you bring in compulsion. In other words, by the voluntary system you get up to a certain percentage and then afterwards the progress is very slow. Therefore, when you find a particular district or a particular area which has reached a certain percentage, namely, that you have got a certain number of boys of school-going age at school, then it is necessary to bring in the principle of compulsion. Otherwise, that district will not make any appreciable advance. I cannot say that the argument of Mr. Sastri is entirely out of place with regard to the analogy of grant-in-aid. But if I remember aright (I am speaking from memory now) Mr. Gokhale's object was that where you have 33 per cent. of the school-going age boys actually at school then you have a fair case made out that you will not make any appreciable progress in that district unless you introduced the principle of compulsion. That is what you have got to answer, and I say, Sir, that the argument which has been advanced is, in my opinion, absolutely unsound. It is the same argument which is advanced in various other matters, namely, it is often said that you are not really fit for self-government unless the masses are educated, unless we will say 99 per cent. of the people are educated. It is the same kind of argument that we should leave the areas where we can really make definite progress alone—leave these areas in a nebulous condition—and go to other areas more backward where we will encourage the voluntary system; and, until that ideal day is reached, namely, perfection and of equalising the whole of India by voluntary system, goodness only knows when that day will come, then we shall think of using the principle of compulsion. This is nothing but an argument in favour of delay, and therefore, I think, such an argument should not have been advanced."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay:—"Sir, I regret that I have to sound a discordant note with regard to one aspect of the Resolution that is before the Council. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma asked the Government to declare 'that one of the post-war reforms should be the introduction throughout British India of free and compulsory primary education immediately after the war.' In other words, my friend asked for a declaration of policy, namely, not only that primary education throughout British India should be made free, but also that primary education should be made compulsory. It is with reference to that element of compulsion that it is my duty to voice the feelings of the Province to which I belong. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Haque has welcomed the ability of the Local Council now to tackle the matter. He might have gone further and said that a Bill for primary education had already been introduced into the Local Council of Bihar and Orissa by a private member. But what do we find? We find that there is strenuous opposition to the element of compulsion in the Bill in the Provincial Council. The matter is now before the Select Committee, and the views of non-official Members of the Council who are opposed to the element of compulsion being introduced in the Bill are also before the Select Committee. There is no doubt that very great opposition will be offered to any provisions that may be retained in the Bill embodying compulsion. There is disagreement as to that aspect of the question, and perhaps it was not necessary to emphasize it for the progress of education throughout the country. The question really is whether the element of compulsion is necessary to accelerate the progress of primary education, or whether it would not be proper to defer taking any step in that direction till such time as all parts of the country are ripe for it. 1-20 P. M.

"I feel therefore that I am not in a position to support the Resolution as it stands."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I am aware that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair has the cause of education more deeply at heart than any of us non-official Members here; that he has been strenuously endeavouring to do what he can in that direction during his tenure of office. I am aware, also, of the painful obstacles which have been thrown in his way especially by the exigencies of the war. But after saying that one cannot help regretting that the Government of India have not been disposed to give a more sympathetic reply to the Resolution which I had the honour of moving 1-24 P. M.

to-day. Last year when I moved my Resolution the Government would not hear of compulsion, would not hear of free and compulsory primary education even in cases where Provincial legislatures were willing to adopt that method. We must be thankful that there has been a decided improvement, that the policy of Government is to make free and compulsory education their ideal. While, Sir, we are thankful for small mercies and for this concession by the Government of India we cannot be accused of ingratitude if a principle which had been accepted for over half-a-century in all advanced countries of the world is now recognised here for the first time, and if we are not warm in our congratulations on the point. What we want are practical steps in the direction in which all responsible Governments have been moving, in the direction of making the whole population of the country literate, and the policy of the Government of India would be judged by that criterion and not by their sentiments however noble they may be. I am not quarrelling with the policy of Government in allowing local bodies to make a departure in the desired direction. We are thankful for it, we welcome it. The question is, whether we shall not be forgetting to do our duty, by being unnecessarily optimistic in that we have allowed a Statute to be placed on the book permitting people to tax themselves for educating their children. Mr. Sharp says that even to the limited extent to which local bodies have undertaken expenditure there has been 21 lakhs increase in municipalities and 73 lakhs increase in local boards. The local bodies cannot congratulate themselves upon the whole of that money being their own. If that is so, would it be expected that these bodies would suddenly develop taxation tendencies and make all the people within their areas literate even if Government could promise them a little pecuniary help? It is for this reason that I have asked that there should be an introduction of free and compulsory education throughout British India so that the more advanced Provinces and the more advanced peoples alone may not have the benefits and resources of the country spent on them, but that the less advanced Provinces and peoples may participate in the benefits. I have framed the Resolution in that way to help the depressed classes whose interests the Government and people in general profess to have at heart. I do not want the distance between them and the others to become longer than it is at present. Therefore in their case, as well as in the case of the more advanced people, the principle of free and compulsory education should be adopted in practice unless, as I have stated, there are political considerations making a policy of that kind absolutely impossible. The Hon'ble Sir William Meyer said that I was preaching autocracy when we are on the eve of reforms placing us on a democratic basis. I am very glad that he is so optimistic about the democratic ideal being adopted in the near future, and if we shall have that I may assure the Hon'ble Member that I shall not require much assistance in getting this policy accepted. But I fear that the millenium may not be reached in the very near future, and, accepting the present conditions, I want the bureaucracy to accept the responsibility which all civilized Governments have accepted and not take shelter behind people somewhat selfish,—and I am very sorry for the Bihar people to whom I shall presently allude................"

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I hope the Hon'ble Member will not allude to the Bihar people."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"And not say that people are unwilling to tax themselves for the purpose. As an instance of what autocracy can do I may tell the Council that the Emperor of Japan had promulgated his decree that in ten years he would establish primary education throughout the land and he did succeed in doing it, and I am sure the

Government of India, if they make up their mind, will be even more successful than the Japanese Emperor has been. So I am not pleading for autocracy but for democracy, and I am sure that democracy will not fail to do its duty if called upon to do it. But when elementary principles, either of morality or of Governmental duty, have to be enforced, I am sure the Hon'ble Member will agree with me that it may be sometimes the duty of the Government to be autocratic, if it be autocratic to do so, and I hope the Government of India will not shrink from being autocratic in this particular. The compulsory attendance clauses in all the educational Acts recognise the principle. Then with regard to the revenue being sufficient, you have 8 crores of rupees of temporary military expenditure at least. You have another 5 millions open to you. You have 13 millions apart from the growth of Provincial revenues. It may be that a portion of that would be expended on military improvements and so on, but still having regard to the growth of expenditure, am I wrong in saying that you have even at the present moment funds to the extent of 8 millions that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair requires for the purpose of starting this scheme? But, as has been pointed out, we shall not require so much money and we cannot spend so much money even if we have it at our disposal, and consequently from the finance point of view, I fail to see any great insuperable difficulties. But as I have said if the principle is accepted, of course you will have to consider the export duties and so on, and it is a question which we cannot enter into now, and we have all stated our views with regard to the manner in which our revenues should be employed, and if the people are relieved to some extent in one direction, I suppose there will be enough resources in their hands which could be utilised and tapped in another direction.

"Then the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp said that the figures for 1914-15 are practically useless for comparison because they included areas which had to be excluded. We may take him at his word, but even taking the figures for 1916-17, you will find that it is 180,000 and 194,000 boys and girls who have received education in addition to the previous number, and that is less than the growth of population during those years according to the 5·5 per cent. standard. It will be much less than that, and so even for these years for which we have accurate figures we have not been credited . . ."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sharp:—" May I point out, Sir, that I did not assert that the reduction to which I referred balances in any way the growth of population. I merely made a statement of fact."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—" Then, Sir, just a few words with regard to the expressions of opinion given by the Hon'ble Mr. Sahay I can understand why it is that gentlemen of his Province, where the land-revenue is so small and has been permanently settled for a number of years, should be so reluctant to appreciate the benefits of compulsion. But that is the reason why I have asked for the application of the principle in all cases alike in favour of Provinces where the people are backward or may be unwilling for various reasons as in the case of Provinces where the people are willing as in the case of the United Provinces; but when they may be very poor it is only in cases of unwillingness that we shall have to enforce primary education, and therein comes the need for invoking the assistance of the Government of India. Well, the controversy with regard to grant-in-aid and local board system does not properly arise, but what I want is that the thing should be done, whether it is done through the instrumentality of the Local Board or through the instrumentality of aided education, I do not mind which for the purposes of the present argument, as either will lead to the same goal, and I shall not therefore take up that particular point. I hope, Sir, that the Resolution will be considered more sympathetically, and the Government of India may, perhaps, be induced by the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair to change their policy in this direction."

RESOLUTION RE FINANCING OF PRIMARY EDUCATION OUT OF IMPERIAL REVENUES.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I have already discussed this Resolution, when speaking of the Education Resolution, and, inasmuch as I have already accepted the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer with regard to the Finance Resolution, I beg leave to withdraw this, if the Council will permit me to do so. The question of the provincialisation of land-revenue is under consideration, and I therefore think there is no use in pressing it."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE POLICE SERVICE RE-ORGANIZATION.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Sir, I beg to move that— 2-53 P. M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Government of India should recommend to the Secretary of State for India—

(1) that the age-limits for the examination for admission into the Indian Police Service be raised from 19—21 to 21—23 ;

(2) that the pensions and salaries of officers of the Indian Police Service should not be enhanced, as has been recommended by the Public Services Commission ;

(3) that the rule which requires that candidates for the examination for the Indian Police Service shall be of pure European descent should be abrogated ; and,

(4) that the said examination should be held simultaneously in India and in England ;

or, if the last recommendation be not accepted, that not less than one-half of the total number of posts in the Indian Police Service should be recruited by an open competitive examination held for the purpose in India.'

"The Council is aware that there is much dissatisfaction among Indians owing to the restrictions which are placed upon their admission into the Indian Police Service. The examination for it is held only in England, and the result of it is that of the 397 appointments which were held by Superintendents of Police in India on the 1st of April 1917, only nine were held by Indians. This is clearly unsatisfactory. We had hoped that the Royal Commission on the Public Services would make recommendations which would remove this dissatisfaction. But, unfortunately, their recommendations have not been in that direction. They have not recommended that the examination should be held simultaneously in India and England, and they have proposed that the age-limit for the examination for entry into the Indian Police Service should remain where it is, that is, from 19 to 21 years. Hitherto there was a restriction imposed that candidates who were to compete for the Indian Police Service should be British subjects of pure European descent. This was naturally felt to be a violation of the promise held out to us by the Act of 1833, and the Commission recognised that this objection deserved to be met. Without admitting that this was illegal or opposed to the Act of 1833, they yet recommended that the present rule should be modified to allow both Europeans of mixed descent and Indians of unmixed Asiatic descent to be admitted as candidates for this examination. But they have unfortunately provided that such Europeans of mixed descent and Indians of unmixed descent should be admitted 'who have been educated in the United Kingdom for a period of five years prior to the examination.' Now, Sir, that was clearly taking away with one hand what it was pretended to give by the other. As I have said before, candidates are required to appear for the examination in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin at the age of 19. In order that an Indian should appear at the examination at the age of 19 he must be in the United Kingdom at the age of 14 or a little earlier. That is clearly making it impossible for Indians to compete at this examination. The Commission themselves felt that this would be the result, because they expressly recognised 'that this will not provide for any substantial advance in the employment of statutory natives of India,' and therefore they devised another means for securing that object. They recommended that 10 per cent. of the Superintendentships should be set apart at once to be filled by promotion from the ranks of Deputy Superintendents, and that the percentage should be raised ultimately to 20; but this cannot meet the requirements of the situation. Hence my Resolution.

"The first point that I urge is that the age-limit should be raised from 19—21 to 21—23. The age-limit for the Indian Civil Service examination is now 22—24. It has been so since 1905. Earlier than that there had been great variations; but from 1892 up to this time the age-limit has ranged between 21 and 24. The present limit of 19—21 means, as I have said above, that

Indians must go to England at the age of 14 or earlier. The condition proposed that a candidate must have been educated in the United Kingdom for a period of years prior to the examination makes it inevitable why this condition of five years' education should have been imposed; but anyhow whether this limit stands or not, and apart from it, I urge that the age-limits should be raised from 19—21 to 21—23, because if you raise the age for the Indian Civil Service examination to 22—24, as it has been since 1905, there is no reason why a lower age should be prescribed for admission into the Indian Police Service. Sir Mahadeo Chaubal felt that this condition of five years' previous study in England, coupled with the age-limit of 19—21, would limit the recruitment of Indians; and he recommended that the age of candidates for this examination should range between 21 and 23.

"My second point, Sir, relates to pensions and salaries. The Commission recognised that only a few years ago the Police Commission had made recommendations, and on the basis of those recommendations, the salaries of officers of the Indian Police Service had been revised and the pay of Assistant Superintendents had been raised from Rs. 400 to 500 per mensem. They recognise that there was no justification for a further all-round increase of pay which members of the Police Service had asked for. They have made recommendations which would add to the annual expenditure by over one lakh of rupees. I submit, Sir, that there is no justification for these salaries being increased, and that the recommendation on this head should not be accepted. The Commission, it is true, have given their reasons for making the recommendations, but I submit that those reasons do not amount to anything more than that, because salaries have been advanced in other departments, salaries should be advanced in this department also. With regard to pensions also, they have said that all officers, except officers of the Indian Civil Service, should in future be placed under the new pension scheme which they have recommended. Now, Sir, I lodge a general protest against that scheme, and I submit that the increase of pensions which has been proposed in the case of the Indian Police Service should not be made.

"As regards the third clause of my Resolution, I have already spoken about the rule which requires candidates for the Indian Police Service to be of pure European descent; and to the fact that the recommendation of the majority of the Commission that the rule should be modified is nullified by the condition which they have imposed of five years' previous education in the United Kingdom prior to the competitive test. I do not think, Sir, that any reason can be assigned for fixing a term of five years for the Police Service examination, when three years have been prescribed in the case of the Indian Civil Service, except this, that the Commission found they had recommended that the age for the Indian Civil Service should be 17—19; and, as they imposed a limit of three years in the case of the Indian Civil Service, they thought that as the youngest age for admission into the Indian Police Service was 19 they ought to add two years more in order that the candidate should appear there after five years. But there is no other reason given as to why the period should be five years. Mr. Madge, who represented the Anglo-Indian community on the Commission, also lodged a vigorous protest on this point, and he urged that the recruitment of Europeans of mixed descent and of Indians of unmixed descent should be without any qualification. I submit, Sir, that this rule which requires that candidates should be of pure European descent should be abrogated entirely without any such restriction as has been suggested by the Public Services Commission.

"The last point which I have taken in my Resolution is that the competitive examination for admission into the Indian Police Service should be held simultaneously in India and in England. We have repeatedly urged that the examination for admission into the Indian Civil Service should be held in India and in England, and all the reasons we have urged in support of that proposition apply with greater force to the examination for admission into the Indian Police Service. The Indian Police Service certainly cannot claim to stand on the same high footing as the Indian Civil Service; and there is much less reason why Indians should not be given every facility to enter the Police

Service of their own country. We have got a large number of capable young men of good education and social position who would be glad to compete for the Service. I submit, Sir, that at this era of the history of British Indian administration the Government should recognise the justice and force of the contention that an examination for admission into the Indian Police Service should be held in India. Some people might go further and claim that it should be held only in India and not in England at all; but that is not what I propose. All that I ask is, that the examination should be held simultaneously in both countries, so that the English and the Indian candidate might be placed on a footing of equality so far as competition is concerned. Until this is done, Indians will not have a fair chance at this examination; and there is no reason why they should not have. The Government have recognised the worth of Indians for holding high offices in the service of their country, in the Executive Council of the Governor General, in the Council of the Secretary of State, as Chief Justice, as Judges of the High Court, as Magistrates and Commissioners, as Sessions Judges, and in various other capacities. Indians have rendered a good account of themselves in all departments into which they have found an admission, and it would be absurd to say that Indians do not possess the qualities which are required in the higher ranks of the Police Service. Wherever Indians have been tried in high offices they have proved themselves to be worthy of the offices which they have held, and I submit that it is in every way just and proper that the restrictions which exist in the way of employing Indians in the Police Service should be removed by the examination being held simultaneously in India and England.

"If this recommendation should still unfortunately not commend itself to Government, then I would submit that the recommendation contained in the last alternative clause should be accepted, that is to say, that not less than one-half of the total number of posts in the Indian Police Service should be recruited by an open competitive examination held for the purpose in India. The Commission have recommended that 10 per cent of the Superintendentships should be set apart to be filled by promoted Deputy Superintendents, and that ultimately this percentage should be raised to 20. This is not sufficient to do justice to the claims of educated Indians, nor sufficient to meet the requirements of good administration in the country. The least that ought to be done is that half the total number of the posts in the Service should be reserved to be recruited by an open competitive examination held in India. It may be said by some that an open competitive examination is not the best means of finding out who are the best men for the Police Service. I submit, Sir, that until a trial has been given to such a system, nobody can justly say that it will not be found to be suitable. When in other departments the best practicable means has been found to be the open competitive examination, the same rule should be applied to the Indian Police Service. It may be urged that there are certain qualities which cannot be tested by an examination. I submit that a good intellectual education and the moral worth which it generally develops would ordinarily furnish the amount of ability, character and integrity that is needed in a police officer of the highest grade; and if the system is tried, the results are likely to prove more satisfactory than is imagined in some quarters. In any case unless the system is tried it cannot be reasonably ruled out of Court. The present system is certainly not satisfactory, and as no other system has been suggested, by which candidates for the Police Service should be recruited, I submit that this system ought to be tried.

"It may be urged that there are parts of the country where the people are not sufficiently advanced in education; if that should be so in some parts, the system of competition may, where necessary, be somewhat modified; for instance, out of the candidates who succeed best in a competitive examination, the desired number of the best of those who belong to certain castes or communities may be picked out and appointed in preference to those who may belong to other communities. I say that such a course can be adopted where it may be found to be necessary. But I expect that, in view of the progress in education which has happily been made by Hindus and Muhammadans, Indian Christians and Parsees, i.e., generally by all communities, it is likely that a fair number of the young men of every important community will find their places in a competitive examination. If however, as I say, experience should show that they are not able to secure a fair number of posts through such an examination, then some qualification might be introduced such as I have indicated, and the best men out of the candidates of a particular community or communities may be selected out of those who competed. My point is that the men who should join the Service should be the best from among the youth of every community who will compete; that no one should be appointed by nomination, but only those should be appointed who have been found by a competitive test to be the best among their community.

"I do not think, Sir, I need detain the Council any longer. I hope that the Resolution will meet with the approval of the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Kesteven :—" Sir, I should like to offer a very few remarks on the subject of this Resolution from the humble standpoint of the man in the street, by which I mean the street of Calcutta. I take it there is no doubt that the Resolution aims at the substitution in the Police Service of Indians for Englishmen throughout, the substitution to be complete and to be carried out as soon as possible, the sooner the better. From one point of view it may be that some sympathy may be found for this end. But I would ask the Council greatly to hesitate before they give it any support and to deny it all support on this occasion. Most of the world, I think, are inclined to take the services of the police very much for granted. We are apt, I think, in ordinary circumstances to forget how much we owe to them, not only for the security of our lives and property, but also for many of the conveniences and comforts of our every-day life. That is for those who are more happily situated than we are in India. Especially is it not the case of those who like myself, live in Calcutta. For the last ten years and upwards we have had to accustom ourselves to the shock when opening our morning papers of finding reports of outrages and crimes of a special kind and of an aggravated and desperate character, some of them occurring in our midst in the town in which we live and some of them near at hand in our Province. We have had to read of conspiracies, to manufacture and throw bombs, of murder and assassination by bomb, by pistol and by other weapons, dacoities with violence some of them committed in the broad light of day with a conspicuous contempt for any precaution of concealment. The Hon'ble Mover is more fortunate in coming from a Province which, so far as I am aware, has been singularly free from crime of this character. Still, I take it that crimes and outrages of this kind must be a matter for very grave concern and apprehension throughout the whole of India and to all those who live in this country; and I must suppose the Hon'ble Pandit to have the same feelings as I have on the subject. More recently we have been glad to notice a diminution in crime of this character, and this gives us some encouragement to hope that things are on their way to something better, and that these crimes may be in course of being stamped out. But this may possibly be due, to temporary and special causes, and in any case the time has not yet come when we can look forward with any confidence to a realisation of that hope. Still we know that a very great deal has been done, splendid work has been done, in grappling with and stamping out this class of crime; we have seen that a great deal is being done and are told—and I am sure we all believe it—of a very much larger body of work which is being done in this direction and which we have not seen. By whom has that work been done, I ask? It has been done, I say unhesitatingly by the police, entirely by the police, and by the police, I mean the Police Service as now constituted. I do not wish to forget the magnificent work, the splendid part in this work, which has been taken by Indian members of the police forces, many of whom have on various occasions shown a devotion and bravery beyond all praise, and have, some of them, paid the extreme penalty with their lives; but they are part of the system which the Resolution seeks to have altered and which I wish to see retained. Nor do I wish to lay too much stress on the fact that what has been done by them has been done under the guidance and direction of their superior European officers. But such is the case, and as I have already said they are all part of the system. Is this the time, I would ask the Council, are these the conditions in which we can contemplate such a drastic and sweeping change as that which is aimed at by this Resolution? It seems to me that this would be a desperate case of changing horses while crossing the stream, and I venture to submit to the Council that the time when these changes can even be contemplated will not arrive until we can say with confidence that crime and outrages of this nature have been definitely stamped out and become things of the past.

"Another matter to which I would refer, and which I think may perhaps be lost sight of, is that in the presidency-towns, especially in Calcutta, where I live, there is a very large European population with very large vested interests which have to be preserved and protected. I submit that that population is entitled to have the protection of European police who understand their interests and what is necessary to protect them and, are, so to speak, members of their own community. To descend to smaller matters, in recent years we have been more and more introducing into the regulation of our cities Western methods and systems in such matters as control of traffic. This is a small matter, but I refer to it as illustrative of many others that can be found. For the direction of such matters as these, it appears to me that for a long time to come there will have to be a considerable body of Europeans at the head of the Police. All these are matters that are not unimportant in themselves; but, being more or less local matters, are of minor importance in comparison with the broader issues. I would, therefore, prefer to leave my argument with what I have stated it as to seditious and anarchical crime. The Hon'ble Mover has suggested that we should make a trial and an experiment. I suggest, Sir, that the present time is not the one in which any experiment can possibly be risked; the situation is too serious, and I would ask the Council to follow me when I state the opinion that the Resolution is not merely premature but is ill-timed."

3-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Maung Bah Too:—"Sir, I do not wish to discuss the Resolution at length, but I merely rise to say that the people of Burma would not tolerate the higher ranks of the Police in Burma being filled with Indians. When my countrymen are ready for these appointments, and are fit to hold them, they will naturally desire to fill them themselves."

3-16 P.M.

The Hon'ble Lieutenant-Colonel S. L. Aplin:—"Sir, the effect of the Hon'ble Member's proposals, as pointed out by the last speaker, the Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven, would obviously be the elimination of the British officers from the higher ranks of the Police and the substitution in their place of Indians, not men whose capacity has been tried, but young men whose only known qualification would be that they possessed sufficient literary aptitude to enable them to pass examinations. I think that this scheme contains all the elements of failure. I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by repeating the arguments against the Resolution that we have just heard, but I should like to say that I am in full sympathy with those arguments. There are, however, two points I should like to emphasize, two reasons which appear to me to have special weight against the acceptance of the Resolution. The first is that the Resolution as it stands is distinctly unfair to the European officers now in the Police. I do not think that anybody who has read the evidence given before the Public Services Commission could possibly question the justice of the conclusion that the Commissioners have arrived at that the pay and prospects of the police should be improved. Whatever steps you may deem necessary as regards future organization there appears to be no reason why the officers now in the Police should be refused what is justly due to them. Secondly, I would call attention to the point raised by my Hon'ble Colleague, Maung Bah Too. I cannot speak, at least from personal experience, of what the effect of the introduction of these proposals would be in India; but as regards my own Province, I have no hesitation in saying that the introduction of these proposals into Burma would meet with the strongest opposition. The reason is plain. Not for many years to come is it probable that the young Burman will be able to compete successfully in open examination with the young Indian. The result will be that if proposals (3) and (4) are accepted the higher appointments in the Police will be gradually filled by Indians. This would create an undesirable situation, undesirable because it would arouse great dissatisfaction and discontent among the people at large. It is not at all the Burman's theory of self-government that the higher appointments in the public services of his own Province should be filled by Indians."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—" Sir, when I came here I was determined not to speak on this Resolution, but the remarks that have fallen from the Hon'ble Member from Calcutta and from the Hon'ble Member from Burma leave me no alternative. The first point that was urged was that this Resolution is a little premature and ill-timed, and that it is likely to be attended with grave consequences. May I point out that, even if the recommendations of the Hon'ble Pandit were to come into full force, it has been calculated that the higher appointments will not be and cannot be filled by Indians for many years to come, so there is very little danger of European supervision being relaxed. Another point has been urged that the special conditions of Bengal have been so grave that it would be absolutely unwise to introduce any changes at the present time. I quite realise the gravity of the situation, but may I ask whether the police services in Bengal since 1858 have not been recruited and filled exclusively by Europeans in the higher branches, and whether if we have come to that perilous pass very great credit can be taken for the method of recruitment and the high brain-power of that Service. I desire to make no disparaging remarks with regard to the men who have been continuing a campaign somewhat successfully against the dacoities in that unfortunate part of the country; but, Sir, it is a legitimate criticism I am advancing that these men have not been able to foresee and have not had sufficient skill to meet the situation before it became perilously grave. It seems, therefore, that a little stiffening, a little competition between the two elements (European and Indian) might not be devoid of some use in making the Service more efficient than it happens to be at present—if there were a little competition, and the knowledge brought home that the officer would not be supported no matter what happened by those at headquarters—things would vastly improve. But in the circumstances the officer's best talents and powers are not trained or perhaps only trained when it is too late. In this connection may I interpose that in the Native States we have not been able to find any very grave inefficiency in the management of matters or in the detection of crime or the punishment of offenders. It may be said that those who have experience of Native States may take a different view. I am not here for any great comparison on that point, but I should like to say that the whole Service is manned by Indians practically in Native States, and that things have not become so desperately bad as to require that supervision which is said to be essential. So far as Madras is concerned, detection has become poorer and poorer, a revision has taken place, and the invariable answer of Government and of the Officer-in-charge of the Police Department, is that there is a better registration of crime and therefore we should not look to very great percentages in the matter of detection. If it is a question of detection some excuse is found for the poor quality of detection; reasons are equally forthcoming to explain other defects. Nobody would advocate violent changes, but I cannot see why this superior system cannot be understood by Indians with proper physical vigour, with physical efficiency, and with high mental power; why should the Indian not be equal to understanding a few simple rules and their enforcement? If there has been any success in the past with regard to the Indian element, it is stated to be because it is under European supervision, without any adequate grounds. Indians in the Police Service are not the best of their kind, for this reason that there is no scope for the best brains. Men may be honest and may be physically and intellectually vigorous, but still they are not in possession of the qualifications necessary in the higher ranks of the Service, according to these artificial standards. They have absolutely nothing to look forward to except three or four appointments, and those under special conditions. That is not the kind of treatment which is conducive to a very high morale in the subordinate ranks of the Indian Police, and that may be partly accountable also for the low efficiency of the police in this country. I hope, therefore, that Hon'ble Members will not consider that we are now in the best of worlds and rest content with the existing system; there is no grave danger of dislocation if the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution is carried."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. Fagan:—"Sir, in considering the Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Member it is scarcely possible to avoid recognising that the specific recommendations which it includes and which seem to invite separate and detailed discussion are in reality aspects of one principle, that they in fact seek to secure the adoption of a policy in regard to the selection of officers for the Indian Police Service which diverges from that which has been in force hitherto. The Indian Police Commission of 1902-03, while providing for the limited, the gradual, the tentative introduction of Indians into the Indian Police Service, laid strong emphasis on the principle that a large proportion of the officers must be European, trained and educated in Europe, and they also remarked that it was essential that there should be distinct methods of recruitment for Indians and Europeans, respectively. The recent Public Services Commission in its majority Report, while recommending the direct appointment of Indians to the Imperial Police Service, and an extension of their promotion from the Provincial Service to the Indian Police Service, expressed a definite opinion that there were grounds of policy for drawing the bulk of its members from Europe under the system at present in force. Specifically, they recommended that the proportion of Indian officers should gradually be increased from 5 to 20 per cent. Such, Sir, broadly speaking, is the position which has existed up to the present, a definite recognition of the principle that the European element in the Police Service must be substantially predominant. On the other hand, the Resolution of the Hon'ble Member seeks to contradict, to abrogate that principle. As I understand it, it aims to throw open the Indian Police Service equally both to Europeans and to Indians. This, then, is the fundamental issue which has to be discussed in connection with this Resolution. I need hardly say that it is an aspect of a much wider question, of a question which covers a far more extensive area than the constitution of the Indian Police Service; the question whether and how far it is essential for the general well-being of India that the British tone, the British atmosphere, and British methods should continue to prevail in its administration and policy. Sir, on that question very much might be said. To discuss it in full would carry me far beyond the comparatively limited scope of the present Resolution. But for the purposes of my argument, I will content myself with one general remark, and that is this, that in no wise differing from, in fact in full agreement with, what I believe to be a general perception which permeates and pervades the vast majority of the population of India, I hold that the maintenance of a British tone, a British atmosphere of British methods is of vital and essential import for the continued well-being, the security, and the peace of India.

3-26 P.M.

"As regards the particular case of the Indian Police Service I can conceive it being argued against me somewhat as follows:—'Basing your opinion as you do on the view which you have just put forward you seem to be oblivious of the fact that your flank has already been effectively turned by the acceptance of the broad principle of the admission of qualified Indians in greater numbers to the more responsible positions in the Public Service.' Sir, may I say without presumption that I cordially share in the acceptance of that principle, that I admit that there is much scope for its progressive application in the light of growing experience. But I would reply that, so far as I am aware, that principle has been accepted subject to the retention of a definitely and substantially predominant British element in those services in which it is desirable and necessary. I urge that in virtue of the essential features of the police force for whose working and efficiency it is primarily and directly responsible, the Indian Police Service is emphatically and obviously one of those services. What, Sir, are those features? In the first place, the Indian Police Force is the direct and immediate agency for carrying out the first, the fundamental, the essential function of a civilized Government, the maintenance of law and order, the detection and prevention of crime. In cases of anything like widespread popular disturbance—and I need hardly remind the Council that such cases have not been unknown in the recent history of India—the police force is the first line of public defence. Again, it is a force of a semi or quasi-military nature in which the necessity for discipline, the need for prompt, effective and unified action are permanent and leading features. Last but not least, the Indian Police Force in the execution of its ordinary duties is in constant and close contact with the people in their daily life and pursuits, and is thus in a position, unless under efficient supervision and discipline, to cause the most grievous hardship and annoyance to the population. The Indian Police Service, I assert, thus stands on a peculiar and special footing of its own; and, though there is scope, and very considerable scope, for the wider admission of properly-qualified Indians, I would maintain that it is of the utmost importance to the public interest that a definitely predominant European element should be maintained. I will go further and will assert that there are few, if any, departments of the administration which have benefited, or which still have to benefit so much by the infusion of British ideas as the Police Department. Much has already been done to inculcate in the members of the Police Force the notion that they are the servants of the public and not its masters, but the process is yet far from complete, and hence the imperfection of which Indians so frequently complain and which Government is seeking to eliminate.

"After these remarks it is, perhaps, scarcely necessary for me to dwell at any length on the specific recommendations embodied in the Resolution. As regards the age-limits, and quite apart from any question of the relative proportion between Indians and Europeans, I would urge on the Council the view that, having regard to the nature of the work and the functions of the Indian Police Service, the present age-limits are in every way suitable and desirable. The experience so far gained under the present system is all in favour of that view. For police work keenness and activity are specially necessary characteristics, and it is more likely that they will be secured at the age of 21 than somewhat later. Again, the present age-limits allow time after arrival in India for specialised training in the Police School in drill and in language. I can see no satisfactory positive ground for altering the present limits other than to facilitate matters for Indian competitors; but that ground loses its weight in view of the fact that it is proposed to open a separate path for their entrance in India. And that brings me to the recommendation for the introduction of the system of open competitive examination for Indian recruits. Sir, the cult of that system in recent years seems to have lost something of its youthful vigour. Far be it from me to suggest that the cult is altogether discredited. The trouble rather is that there is a growing body of scepticism, and scepticism which has infected circles of Indian thought and opinion which can in no way be disregarded, scepticism as to whether the system is in reality able to give us all that its devotees claim for it, a scepticism as to whether in this country the capacity to succeed in all open competitive examination is identical with, or equivalent to, the capacity to fill any and every public office in any and every part of India. Personally, I share that scepticism for reasons analogous to those which have been developed in Chapter 6 of the Report of the Public Services Commission. Doubtless, the door of the Indian Police Service should be opened wider to Indians who are shown to be possessed of the necessary qualities of grit and power of command, but I for one do not believe that that result can be satisfactorily secured in India by a system of open competition pure and simple,

"As regards the third recommendation, there is, I think, much to be said in favour of the broad and simple principle that Indian and European recruitment for the Indian Police Service should be kept separate and distinct. But, at the same time, I am in sympathy with the desire to abrogate, under proper conditions, the explicit racial bar which exists at the present time.

"Turning, lastly, to the second recommendation, regarding salaries and pensions, it seems to suggest that the Public Services Commission have, in their proposals, treated the Indian Police Service with some peculiar degree of liberality. But what are the facts? As regards salaries, the net result of their proposals is an annual saving of some Rs. 17,000. In the case of pensions, their proposals practically amount to this, that the general pension scheme which the Commission framed should apply to the Indian Police Service no less than to others. I do not propose to examine that scheme. I will only remark that it may be fairly said that the benefits which it proposes to confer are on a scale which is distinctly and decidedly modest. But, on what grounds of equity and fairness, can it be urged that the Indian Police Service, of all services, should only be excluded from the benefits proposed?"

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"I must remind the Hon'ble Member that he is exceeding his time."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. Fagan :—"The work of the Service is yearly increasing in responsibility, and, if men of character and brains are to continue to be obtained, the terms and conditions of the Service must be adequately attractive. Sir, during the past four years the soil of three Continents has been watered with the blood of the flower of the youth of England, and if I mistake not, when the days of peace return, there will be a tendency, among the survivors in its depleted ranks, to feel that the home country and the Colonies have a first call on their energies in the work of social reconstruction, in helping to repair the ravages of war, and it may well be that India will not then be in so strong a position to call to her service the virile power of England as she has been in the past. To some that may seem to be a satisfactory position, but if the maintenance of a predominant British element in Indian administration is indeed a necessity, if that is not yet a worn-out and discredited fetish, then I venture to think that policy as regards remuneration in the Indian Police Service, as in others, will have to proceed in directions more or less diametrically opposed to those recommended by the Hon'ble Mover."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjea :—"Sir, it seems to me that the discussion has brought out at least one point of common agreement amongst all classes of speakers who have addressed the Council. That common point of agreement is, that the rule which imposes a racial disqualification and excludes Indians from the competitive test in London should be done away with. I think that is a common ground of agreement, a common platform upon which we stand. 3-45 P.M.

"An Hon'ble Member, speaking from that side of the Council, was good enough to say that if the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution was accepted it would have the effect of eliminating Englishmen altogether from the higher ranks of the Police Service. That is a bit of wild and romantic exaggeration. Even the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan does not go beyond 50 per cent. of the appointments being reserved for Indians. I think, therefore, that we may dismiss that part of the argument which has been adduced. We stand upon this common platform that, so far as the Government of India rule is concerned, the rule excluding Indians from the competitive test, the unanimous sense of this Council is that it should go. That is a point gained.

"Next comes the question whether Indians should fill 10 per cent. of the posts, or 20 per cent. or 50 per cent. In regard to that matter there is a very wide divergence of opinion. It is claimed for the police that it is a highly efficient service. I am compelled to say, Sir, that it is one of the least efficient departments of the State. If I were to give expression to the public opinion of my countrymen I would say that the Post Office is the most efficient and the police is the least efficient department of the State, and, that being so, we the people of India think that it is necessary to re-organise it even on the ground of efficiency. Facts have been supplied and in this debate, which show that the police is not as efficient as it ought to be. My Hon'ble friend (Mr. Kesteven) has referred to the bomb-throwing, the assassinations, the dacoities, the murders, and things of that kind which took place in Calcutta some few months back, and he has used it for the purpose of showing that, but for the European direction, those dacoities and murders would not have been put an end to. But, Sir, we have this fact that in France there were things of that kind not many years back in Paris and elsewhere, and the French police had no difficulty in suppressing them; our police had considerable difficulty in dealing with them. Therefore, instead of that being an argument in favour of police efficiency, I say it is an argument against it. If the police were alert, vigilant, capable, if they knew what was taking place in the corners and by-lanes of our great city, they would have found out the conspiracies that were being hatched and would have prevented the crimes that took place. The object of the police is of a two-fold character, to prevent crime and to detect it. I am compelled to say that they are singularly deficient in both these branches of police work, and they were deficient in the very cases to which my Hon'ble friend referred, and on the ground of which he claimed efficiency for the police. Then my Hon'ble friend observed that it was owing to European direction that these things were successfully dealt with. My friend omitted to notice the bravery, the heroism, the pluck, the self-denial of the Indian police officers who voluntarily threw away their lives in the service ...."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Kesteven :—" I expressly referred to the bravery and courage and devotion of the Indian Police Force. "

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" The Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea may not have heard what the Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven said on that point. "

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—" I am very glad that my Hon'ble friend did bear testimony to that fact. Therefore, these assassinations, dacoities, and so forth bring out the fact that Indian policemen possess, in a conspicuous degree, those qualities which contribute to the efficiency of the police.

" Well, Sir, my point is that the police is not as efficient as it ought to be, and therefore it should be re-organized with a large leven of Indian officers in the higher ranks.

" Another Hon'ble gentleman—I think it was the last speaker—observed that our policemen regard themselves as the servants of the public—not a bit of it—as the masters of the public. The policeman in the street is the lord of creation and thinks that he can do what he likes. I will give you a personal instance of what happened the other day. (At this stage the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan rose.) I am in possession of the house, and I am not going to sit down because you have risen......."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I must remind the Hon'ble Member that he must address his remarks to the Chair and not to any one else."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—" I bow to your ruling, Sir. I will give the Council a personal experience to illustrate my remark that a policeman considers himself to be the master of the public and not their servant. Three or four days ago a friend and I were coming in our carriage to this place. A policeman stops us on the way. He says 'this road is not meant for Indians but for Europeans, and you must go the other way.' I said 'I am determined to go; you can do what you like'. And I did go in spite of his protest. Now this is an instance of personal experience which took place within a hundred yards of the Secretariat. And yet you say in this place that the policemen consider themselves to be the servants of the public. They do nothing of the sort, they consider themselves to be the masters of the public. The whole atmosphere has to be changed, and if you would change the atmosphere it can only be done by the introduction, the large introduction, of qualified Indians.

"My Hon'ble friend there has spoken of the British atmosphere. I admire the British atmosphere; it is the very breath of our lives. Now, Sir, the British atmosphere may exist without the component parts, the units being altogether British. Take the Provincial Judicial Service. It is saturated with the British atmosphere, with the spirit of British honesty, of British justice, of British integrity. Who are the members of the Provincial Judicial Service? Indians, 99 per cent. of them are Indians. It is not upon race, creed, or religion that the high British atmosphere depends. It is upon the qualities of the men that compose a particular Service that the atmosphere of that Service depends, and if we have men of the right sort, though they may be men of brown colour, though they may not be Europeans, the British atmosphere will be maintained. Therefore, I do think that the time has come for a re-organisation of the police for the purpose of efficiency, and, in order to make it more efficient, in order to make the police feel that they are the servants of the public and not the masters of the public, I think it is necessary that the Indian element should be largely introduced into the police force. We are talking of responsible government. To whom are the police who go about the streets responsible? Responsible they may be to their superiors, not to the people in any sense, not to those who pay them. Therefore, in the interests of the efficiency of the police, apart from other considerations, it is of the utmost importance that we should re-organise the force, and the least that we can do is to accept the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya."

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh:—"Mr. Vice-President, strengthened by the experience I have of the Police Services, I beg to support the Resolution just moved by my Hon'ble friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. The recommendation made in it will not only redress, in a great measure, a standing grievance of the Indians, but will also make the Police Services more efficient, more popular, and more suited to the requirements of the country. It is undesirable that the age-limit, at present fixed for the admission in examination of candidates for Police Services, is a little too low, and precludes us from getting police officers of that mature judgment which might be expected from them, and which they are called upon to exercise in the discharge of duties that devolve upon them. It is owing to age-limit that we get officers too young and too prone to fall victims to their own ill-framed ideas or in the hands of low-paid Indian officers. The urgent need in the administration of this country is to cheapen its administrative machinery compatible with efficiency, but I am afraid the recommendation of the Public Services Commission for enhancing the pensions and salaries of officers in the Police Services is altogether in the other direction. I am sorry I am not prepared to admit the advisability of this recommendation either from the point of view of efficiency or of expediency. 3-51 P.M.

"The rule debarring the Indians from participating in the examination for the recruitment of such Services is not only humiliating to the self-respect of the Indian people, but is also rendering the Police Services less efficient than they ought to be. In my opinion, as far as these Services are concerned, it is a weak argument to say that as the police have to maintain order and peace, it is necessary to keep British officers at the head in the districts. I very strongly hold, and I assure the Council that it is not from any racial motives that if efficiency and reform of these Services are desirable, the first step should be to provide greater facilities to Indians of prescribed merit to occupy higher posts in these Services. It is needless for me to urge any detailed arguments in support of this view. The grievances of the people against the police would be greatly minimised, and in the detection and prevention of crime there will be a greater co-operation between the people and the police. I hope the Government would be pleased to see their way to accept the recommendation contained in the Resolution, and to take early steps to adopt measures to recruit Indians of merit and respectability for higher posts of these Services in greater numbers."

3-56 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir James Walker :—" Sir, in the discussion to which we have been listening on this Resolution, I venture to think there has been a tendency rather to discuss the ultimate result of the Resolution than its definite and immediate object. Its definite object is to secure the Indianization of the Service through the avenue of open competitive examination. No doubt, the Public Services Commission apprehended it to be necessary to provide certain safeguards to retain a preponderance of the English element. But, Sir, it seems to me that if any Member of this Council thinks the best way of filling the Police Service is simply to try and get the cheapest suitable article, regardless of its country of origin—as I have, indeed, heard it recommended for obtaining Finance Ministers—that conclusion does not necessarily mean that the best value for his money is the candidate who offers the largest number of marks at an open competitive examination. I would venture to impress upon Hon'ble Members that, however much they may sympathise with the object of the Hon'ble Pandit in moving this Resolution, they cannot support it unless they are ready to endorse open competition as the right means of selecting candidates for the police.

" Sir, the other day I had great pleasure in supporting a Resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's, intended to afford facilities to Indians to enter the Indian Civil Service through the open door of competition along with their English compeers. I am not so much of a sceptic as my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan is in regard to open competitive examination as a means of selection. I am in favour of it wherever it is feasible; but in the case of the police a joint examination is not feasible. There is such an enormous difference between the class of candidates who compete for this Service in the two countries. Well, Sir, as regards an examination in India, in the present condition of Indian education, I should despair of getting thereby the right stamp of men. My conclusion is the result of over 31 years' service— the better part of a year of which was actually spent as an Inspector-General of Police. But no doubt it will be said that that is bureaucratic experience. Well, Sir, what I would ask the Council just for a moment to note is the attitude taken up by certain members of the Commission. There is Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, whose sympathy with Indian aspirations is known to everybody. He accepts the majority's recommendation without any minute of dissent; but he makes one remark, which, I think, is very pertinent to the whole question, in his general minute: 'It is, however, far more important for an increasing employment of Indians in the Services that their recruits should be good than that they should, for the moment, be numerous.' Then Sir Mahadeo Chaubal distinctly says that he wishes to see the competitive system extended as far as possible, but all that he does is slightly to raise the age so as to make it, as he says, 'just possible' for some more young Indians to get in through the English gate. In particular, I would ask the Council to consider the case of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim. Now, that Member was not hampered by any ideal of securing unanimity with his colleagues in giving a full and free expression to his opinions. Now Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim is sceptical of the need for the precautions, recommended by his colleagues in order to safeguard the British element, and definitely recommends competitive examination in the case of half of the Provincial Service. But what does he do in the case of the Police Service? He recommends that 75 per cent. of the Assistant Superintendents should pass in by the examination in London; and, although he takes off the racial bar, he still retains the age at 19—21. He cannot, therefore, have contemplated a very large number of Indians being successful. For the remaining 25 per cent. he does not recommend competition at all, but selection by Selection Committees. I would remind the Council that he distinctly tells us that his main recommendations were discussed with, and had the concurrence of, Mr. Gokhale.

"The Hon'ble Pandit admits that this selection of superior police officers by open competition which he suggests will be an experiment, but he does not propose it on any experimental scale. If his second best alternative is accepted, namely, that at least one-half of the total number of posts should be recruited by an open competitive examination held in India, that will leave only the other half for both English appointments and for promotions from the Provincial Service combined. If his first alternative of a simultaneous examination were accepted, Englishmen would undoubtedly be swamped out by the Indian element. Just compare the educational standard of the Indian candidate for direct appointment to the post of Assistant Superintendent with that of the English boys appearing for the Police Examination. As the Commission says—

'For this service suitable Europeans can be got for salaries as low in relation to the general run of European salaries, as the salaries required to get a suitable native of India are high in relation to the general run of Indian salaries.'

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma said that even if the Hon'ble Pandit's recommendations were accepted, the higher appointments would not be filled by Indians for many years to come. But he forgets that the conditions of the Service are such that within five years quite a lot of the candidates would be acting temporarily as Superintendent, and in eight years the bulk of them would be permanently acting as such, so that the effect would be felt very soon. It is for Hon'ble Members to consider whether, when constitutional changes in the direction of responsible self-government are in contemplation, the Police Service is a very suitable Service for such a radical experiment as the Hon'ble Pandit proposes. It is to that Service after all that any Government look for the maintenance of internal security. I will not detain the Council any longer except to remind non-official Members that in nailing their colours to the mast of selection by open competitive examination they are, perhaps, rushing in with the Hon'ble Pandit where Mr. Abdur Rahim and others would fear to tread. I beg to oppose the Resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir Hamilton Grant:—"Sir, I am concerned with this Resolution in so far as it touches the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan, which come mainly under the control of the Foreign and Political Department. Under present arrangements the police officers serving in the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan belong to the Punjab cadre, and are seconded from that cadre for service in those Provinces; and therefore any sweeping change which affects the Punjab Police must ipso facto affect the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan. 4-4 P.

"It may be urged that special arrangements might be made for the appointment of police officers for these two turbulent Provinces. The matter has been fully considered, and it has been found quite impossible to constitute a separate cadre for these Provinces owing to the paucity of appointments. I need not go into this matter, but I can assure this Council that this expedient is impossible. Therefore, the present arrangement must remain, and, if the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution were to come into force, we should find inevitably among the North-West Frontier police officers before long Indian officers. I have no desire, Sir, to draw any comparison between the comparative competence of Indians and Englishmen for appointments in general; but I have no hesitation whatever in saying that for police service on the North-West Frontier Province and in Baluchistan in the higher police appointments, involving as they do many quasi-political duties, the average Indian is not competent, and it is essential to have European British officers. I do not want to harp on this comparatively small issue in the case, but I think that it should be borne in mind by the Council that, whatever arrangements may be made, will affect these two Provinces, the peace and order of which are of first class importance to India, not only important in themselves, but as inevitably reacting upon the adjoining tribal area. With regard to Mr. Bannerjea's remarks I would say one thing, and one thing only. He has complained bitterly that the police in India are not the servants of the public but the masters. I think that, so far as their province is concerned, that is exactly what the police should be; they should be masters and not servants; we do not want our police officers or our policemen to be salaaming to a recalcitrant public and doing everything they are told as obedient servants should. We want them within the limitations and trammels that attend on all good masters to perform their work as masters and to nominate the public within their own province.

"There is one other thing that I should like to say before I sit down, and this I say in all seriousness. I should like to sound a note of warning, to make an appeal, an appeal which I should like to have made yesterday when the Hon'ble Pandit brought forward his Resolution about the enhancement of passenger rates. I should ask this Council, are we acting wisely in the interests of our own reputation when at a time like the present, a time when every day is full of fate, we indulge in an orgy of Resolutions on domestic matters of a far from emergent nature? I should like to ask them how the reports of this action of ours will read at Home and abroad. I should like to ask them whether it does not, to a great extent, misrepresent the real temper of this Council. I believe that there is not a Member here present who is not as greatly anxious as I am to see this war victoriously ended and to devote his efforts to this end. But if in the daily reports of our proceedings the public at Home and the public abroad read that we have been bickering and wrangling either over matters of petty discomfort like the enhancement of railway rates or matters of commonplace domestic interest like the Resolution now under discussion, they can only conclude one thing, and that is, that we are not taking this war seriously, and I will appeal to the Council as one who has lived many years in India, and who loves India, and who is jealous of the good name of India, to bethink them whether they are wise in indulging in this spate of domestic discussion at a time like the present, and whether they would not be wise to postpone these nebulous Resolutions to a later date when they can be discussed without the grave pre-occupations that now surround this Government, and thereby prove themselves a true daughter of the great mother of Parliaments at Westminster."

4-10 P. M. The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"I think, Sir, that there is a considerable amount of misapprehension about the scope and meaning of the Resolution which has been moved by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. Some of the Hon'ble Members who have preceded me this afternoon seemed to have an apprehension that one sure and certain consequence of the acceptanee of the Resolution by this Council would be that Indians would swamp the Europeans in the Police Service, and that very probably the Police Service will be depleted of Europeans. Now, I do not have any such apprehensions in the matter. If the Hon'ble Pandit's Resolution is accepted this afternoon, I should think it would take at least 15 to 20 years' time before the number of Indians in the higher grades of the Police Service would be equal to that of the Europeans; and that would be at the speediest rate. So that at least for the next 15 or 20 years neither Europeans in Calcutta need apprehend any serious menace to their safety, nor need people in Baluchistan apprehend any catastrophe in the immediate future. I think arguments of this character are really beside the mark. They are in the nature of special pleading, arguments which you would expect from monopolists. Well, as regards Burma, it has been said that the Burman feeling is very strong against Indians occupying higher positions there. I can appreciate that feeling. Well, if Burma does not want Indians, it should not be difficult for Government to make a special provision for Burma, and no one would be more happy than myself if more Burmans could get into the higher grades of the Service in that Province. I have no doubt that the time will soon arrive when Burmans will be clamouring, as we have been clamouring, for the admission of their own countrymen into the higher ranks of the Service in their country. Now, Sir, the Public Services Commission must have been aware, indeed the report itself shows, that they were amply aware of the provisions of the Statute of 1833. Sir Mahadeo Chaubal refers to that Statute in his Minute on the subject. Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim also refers to it, and even the majority of the Commission referred to it. I believe, speaking for myself, that the provision in regard to the admission of Indians in the higher grades of the Police Service was made with a view apparently to remove the doubts which had arisen with regard to the practice which had been followed during the last 20 or 25 years. It had been urged that the rule which required that the candidates who appeared at the police examination should be of European descent was in direct violation of the provisions of the Statute of 1833. To get over that difficulty, probably the Public Services Commission thought it necessary to say 'All right, in future Indians, too, will be eligible for the higher grades of the Police Service, provided they received five years' education in one of the schools in England.' Now, I should like the Council to realise the significance of this. It really means, as was pointed out by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, that we should send our boys away at the age of 13½ or 14 on the offchance that after five years' study they might manage to pass the examination. Now, Sir, I put it to you how many Indians are there in this country who can afford to send their sons at the age of 14 to take that risk? I should like to know how many Englishmen would like to send their boys to any foreign country to qualify for any particular career at that age?

"I think, Sir, if it were intended to exclude Indians it would be much more fair, much more straightforward and more courageous to say 'No, for reasons of policy we do not want Indians to come into the Service and we do not fight shy of that conclusion.' Therefore, Sir, I say that the departure made by the Public Services Commission is of absolutely no value to us. I read some time ago some articles on the report of the Commission in a leading Anglo-Indian newspaper, which described that report as a 'small-souled document.' It was not until I read the Chapter on Police Services, that I realised the full significance of the remark. Now, Sir, a great deal has been said to-day about the continuance of British character and of British traditions. Well, I am an admirer of British character and of British traditions, but I do not think it is a part of British character or of British traditions to exclude others from a fair share of their dues. I should be very sorry if that was a part of the British character or of British tradition. I venture to say that if Mr. Justice Shambunath Pandit had not been appointed a Judge in or about 1864, similar arguments might have been urged to-day against the appointment of Indian Judges to High Courts. It was once said by a former Law Member that Indians were subtle lawyers. It was not difficult to imagine that, if the question of appoining them as High Court Judges arose now, it might be urged that though they were subtle lawyers they were not men of practical common-sense, they could not take a broad view of things, and therefore it was risky to appoint Indians. If Indians had not entered the Indian Civil Service, if Mr. Satyendra Nath Tagore had not first of all entered the Indian Civil Service, and if Indians now sought to enter the portals of that Service, inconvenient questions might have arisen. Perhaps it would be said that they had not got British character and British traditions, and, although they had lived in an atmosphere of British character and of British traditions for 100 years, they had not yet imbibed either. Arguments such as these may be very good to convince those who have the monopoly of these posts: they may be weighty in the eyes of the bureaucracy, but let me tell you, the less you talk in this fashion and refer to such arguments the better for the reputation of bureaucracy. Let us be frank and open about this matter. If you have decided that for reasons of State, at any rate in the Police Services, or the Military Services, it is not desirable to admit Indians into higher ranks say so plainly, but do not use arguments that only provoke and do not convince us. I submit that, so far as our claim on grounds of law and justice is concerned, it is indisputable. It is for the Government to say whether that claim will be admitted on grounds of expediency also. I for my part do not wish to enter into grounds of expediency. I take my stand on the higher ground of justice and natural right. With regard to the other part of the Resolution which relates to the increase of salaries of the Indian Police it is enough for me to say that the United Provinces Government in the memorandum which they submitted to the Public Services Commission, and which is printed in the Volume containing the evidence, did not think that any case for increase of salary had been made out, I speak subject to correction. Sir, I for one say that, unless Indians are placed on a footing of absolute equality with Europeans, and until that is so in principle and practice, I will offer opposition to the last day of my life to any proposal which gives Englishmen an advantage and places my countrymen under a ban. If there is really any need for an increase in salary in the Services, it is in the lower ranks of the Police and not in the higher. But, so long as you keep my countrymen under a ban, it will be my duty to oppose such a proposal. In the end I would only say that if there is any real objection to the present proposal, why not suggest another means of appointing Indians to the higher ranks of the Services? The Public Services Commission are willing that 20 per cent. Indians should ultimately be appointed, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya suggests 50 per cent. In other words, it comes to this that the Public Services Commission are prepared to allow one-fifth, Mr. Malaviya wants one-half. I think it should not be difficult for Government to devise some means by which Indian aspirations in regard to this matter could be satisfied, even if the door of competition was condemned Sir, I strongly support the Resolution moved by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya."

4-21 P. M. The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:— "The Resolution as framed by my friend the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, jumbling together a number of recommendations within a single Resolution, is calculated to place Hon'ble Members who may be in perfect sympathy with some of the recommendations, but may not be prepared to support others, in a difficult position. In the remarks that I propose to make in connection with this Resolution, I intend to confine myself to the third of the recommendations, with which I am in complete sympathy. No one entertains more genuine admiration than myself for the high qualities displayed by the European Police Officer in maintaining law and order, in the detection and prevention of crime. I fully and frankly recognise that his continued presence in the higher ranks of our Police Services is in the highest degree desirable. But that is one aspect of the question. There is the other aspect of the question: is it desirable, is it equitable that Indians, properly qualified Indians, should be absolutely excluded from competing for these higher appointments in the examinations held in England? I for one cannot conceive any ground of policy or expediency warranting the continued existence of this state of things. Hon'ble Members are aware that the appointments in the Indian Civil Service have long been open to properly qualified Indians; that the Indian Medical Service is also open to properly qualified Indians, and that recently commissioned ranks in the Indian Army have been thrown open by His Majesty, the King-Emperor, to Indians. Lastly, the Public Services Commission has recommended the promotion of selected Police Officers from the subordinate Police Services to a certain number of posts in the higher Police Service. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, there is absolutely no justification whatever for the exclusion of Indians, properly-qualified Indians, from competing in the open competitive examinations in England. In so far as this recommendation is embodied in clause 3 of the Resolution, I am in entire accord with my friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, and I give the proposal my cordial support."

4-25 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:— "Sir, the position of Government in regard to the subject of this Resolution is much the same as it was during the last Session. We have not the opinions of Local Governments before us, and no decision on the recommendations of the Commission has been arrived at.

[13TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Vincent.]

"For this reason, although I do not doubt that the discussion of the Resolution will be useful, it will be obvious to the Council that the Government cannot accept it. I will take the opportunity, however, if I may, of examining these proposals and putting before Council what are my provisional opinions on them. I do this because I was reproached during the last Session for not committing myself sufficiently to definite opinions on some of the Resolutions which came before Council, and to make it clear that I took this course not because I do not hold opinions of my own on them, but merely because I felt myself in a somewhat difficult position, having regard to my office as Home Member.

"Well I will take up the recommendations in this Resolution seriatim. I will discuss the age question first. I should like to point out that the age now fixed was decided after prolonged consideration of the recommendations of the Indian Police Commission of 1902-03. That body recommended a slightly lower age, I think it was 18 to 20, but for various reasons into which I do not wish to enter now, the Government finally decided on the age now prescribed. Then I draw attention to the fact that none of the members of the recent Public Services Commission have suggested any change in this matter, except Sir Mahadeo Chaubal, and I cannot but feel that he only did so in view of the recommendation of the Commission that it should be obligatory on all candidates to have had five years' previous education in England before the examination.

"On the merits I put it to the Council that the Government do not necessarily need for the Police Service men with university qualifications. What they seek to obtain is younger men with a good public school education, of active habits, physically fit, of an age suitable for training mentally and physically, and prepared to undergo the hardships which such training necessarily entails. I submit, further, that there is no analogy at all between the Police Service and the Indian Civil Service in this respect, and I think that a more correct comparison might be made with the Army. I believe that in the Army it has been found that the best age for admission is approximately the school-leaving age, and the same remarks apply with particular force to the Police Service in this country, as it is really in a great measure a quasi-military force. We know that the present system has produced, a suitable class of recruits, and there is therefore no necessity, and indeed no reason, to change it. Further, if the limits were raised as proposed, I fear myself that many of the advantages which we now secure might be lost. Police officers would be older when they entered the service, less amenable to discipline, and less receptive in the matter of education and training, and they would certainly be less fit and active at the end of their service. Again, it is for the Council to consider whether we should not, if we sought to secure suitable recruits at a later age, have to pay them considerably more than we do at present, when you can get younger men at cheaper rates. These are considerations that appear to me of importance in considering this question of age.

"Now I turn to the question of pay and pensions. I can only say that the Government have not arrived at any decision on the point, and it would be most unwise for me to express any definite opinion here. The Government have, of course, no wish to pay more than is necessary, and I think sometimes that the very jealous manner with which proposals for increase of expenditure are regarded in the Finance Department is not sufficiently realised by non-official Members of this Council. The Public Services Commission have themselves recommended very slight increases, if any. They say, 'Salaries are now drawn under the graded system. We recommend, as elsewhere, that the incremental method of payment should be substituted, but as regards the rates we cannot accede to the request which was made to us for a further all-round increase.' They go on to say that the financial effect of their scheme would be a saving of Rs. 17,000 a year. There is, however, another aspect of this matter which the Government cannot neglect, and the facts here will have to be faced as in other services if the intention is to continue to recruit Europeans of suitable character. If we want such men a reasonable wage must be paid. We know that there are complaints that the present wage is insufficient, and that the conditions of the service are not satisfactory, and I hope the Council will realise the fact that a poorly-paid Police may be the worst form of economy. It is, indeed, essential that not only in the lower grades, but also in the higher ranks officers should have a pay on which they can live decently and which will place them always beyond any possibility of temptation. I understood the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru to say that Sir James Meston's Government did not propose to the Public Services Commission any increase of pay to the higher ranks of the Police. Well, I am not aware of what Sir James Meston's opinions were then because . . ."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"You will find that in the Volume containing evidence."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I do not doubt the accuracy of the statement, for I have not had time to read all the volumes of evidence, but here is an opinion which he expressed recently on the subject. Speaking to a Parade of police officers on 7th January 1918 he said:—

'I know the growing burden of work and responsibility upon you (the Police) and the great rise in the cost of living has hit you perhaps harder than any other class in the public service. It has, therefore, been my clear duty, on receiving your recent memorials on the subject, to say to the Government of India what I am saying to you now and to support, as strongly as I was able, your prayer for special consideration at their hands.'

"That, Sir, is what Sir James Meston recently said on this point. Speaking from my own knowledge and from information which I have received from many police officers, I can honestly say that the position of many married officers in this service, especially those who have families to educate, is really serious and that there is good reason to think that in some cases financial anxieties have affected the efficiency of the officers concerned. Many officers are unable to take leave even when such leave is necessary in the interests of the State, and when illness is added, their financial position is one of great difficulty.

"It was suggested by one Hon'ble Member that there had been a tendency to neglect the interests of the lower ranks for the benefit of the higher ranks. I should like to assure the Council that there is no foundation for this supposition. I will cite a few figures. I find that in 1906 the cost of the Imperial Police Service was 13·5 per cent. of the total police expenditure, whereas in 1916 it was only 7·9 per cent. Again, I have checked the figures in 1912-13 to see what the actual additions in expenditure were in the different grades. I find that the increase in police expenditure as a result of the Police Commission's recommendations up to 1912-13, that is ten years after the Commission reported, was 15 lakhs on the Imperial Service, 70 lakhs in the case of Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors, and over 70 lakhs in the case of constables and head constables. I told the Council a few days ago of the amounts which we were spending this year to improve the conditions of the lower services in various Provinces. I find again that the increase in expenditure on the Imperial Police Service in any year up to and including 1916, as compared with 1912, has been less than 4½ per cent., whereas in other branches of the service it has varied from as much as 37 per cent. in one year to 13 per cent. and 9 per cent. in others. Indeed, I may say with confidence that the conditions of the service of the lower ranks of the Police have been the constant care of Government in recent years, and that they have been materially improved. I do not say we have done all that we should like to have done, but we have done all that was possible. I hope I have said enough to indicate that there are a number of very difficult questions which will have to be considered before Government can say that they will not award any increase or any improvement in the prospects of the Imperial Police Service, and I trust that the Council will realise that the decision of this question is not really so easy as it appears.

"The third point in the Resolution is the question of abrogating that rule which requires every candidate for the superior Police Service to be of European parentage. The Commission has recommended the cancellation of this requirement, and though the Government of India have arrived at no decision on the point as far as I am aware, at least no definite decision, I must confess to being much impressed by the arguments that have been put forward by the Hon'ble Mover and by others in this Council, and it is my earnest hope that this requirement will be cancelled.

"I also see great weight in the criticisms as to the requirement of five years' previous education in England. I value as highly as any one the qualities which are developed by education in Great Britain, and the character which is the result of such education, but I doubt whether it would be possible to send Indian boys at the age of 14 to Europe unless their parents were resident there, and I do fear that lads of that age might be exposed to great temptations if they were sent there without proper guardianship.

"I now come to the more difficult question of simultaneous examinations, and I desire to consider this question simply on the merits without any reference to historical or theoretical arguments. So far as intellectual qualifications are concerned, I quite admit that we might possibly, or even probably, secure by a system of simultaneous examinations for the police service a class of men educationally superior to the present recruit in so far as intellectual capacity is tested by examination, a subject on which I have some doubt, but I do believe that in the police as in certain other Services, once a particular standard of education is obtained, what is wanted more than intellectual ability is character, power of decision, and other qualities which are in fact mponderable and the possession of which cannot be tested by any examination. I am aware that the existence of such qualities has been the subject of sarcastic remark—sarcastic perhaps is too severe a word, I will say of remark and criticism—in this Council, but character is a very real essential in spite of all that has been said. I admit that at present we do not obtain men of the first rank for the service from the educational point of view, and that the competition is not very severe. I believe also that competition in England will be less keen than ever after the war, when there will be many openings for young men and when the present wastage of the younger generation is felt more fully. On the other hand, in India, the position is very different, and I feel that the service would, particularly if the age-limit were raised, attract a large number of candidates of university qualifications. I cannot feel at all sure, however, that these candidates would necessarily possess the qualities required in efficient police officers. I do not for one moment suggest that these qualities are not to be found in Indians, but what I do suggest is, that they will not necessarily be secured by a competitive examination, and that an examination is indeed no test for ascertaining whether a candidate is possessed of these qualities or not. For the police service, as I have said, the qualities primarily required are power to lead and command, quick decision, courage, readiness to accept responsibility, endurance, physical and moral, and absolute impartiality. These are qualifications which cannot be tested by any form of examination that I know of.

"Further, in spite of what has been said by Dr. Sapru, I believe that the result of accepting this recommendation would be the speedy exclusion of the British element from the police service altogether, and if the Council does not seek to bring this about, then, I think, they ought to hesitate before they accept this recommendation of the Hon'ble Mover. If, on the other hand, it is the intention to arrive at this result, then I must express my emphatic dissent from the proposal. The police service is one of the security services of the country. On it the welfare and peace of this country directly depend. It is the agency which is responsible for the maintenance of law and order, without which there can be no prosperity. I do not suggest that law and order is the sole criterion of good government, but I do say that no Government is a good Government that fails in this respect, and no one can deny that the British Government has adequately performed this duty. I sometimes think that the benefits which the Government have conferred on this land in this respect are in these days overlooked, and that the disorder into which this country was plunged before the era of the British, when might was right and the whole country was a prey to wandering gangs of marauders, is forgotten. I say further that in this work of securing the peace and in the maintenance of law and order, the police have played a very great part, and I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan that on this department a responsibility falls which is different from the responsibility which falls on any other department, and that from the superior officers of this Service qualities are demanded of a character different from that of any other Service, including my own. I would say also that there is no Service in which a relaxation of morale and efficiency sooner shows actual and even disastrous results. Setting aside again normal preventive work, if disturbances or rises occur, our first line of defence is, as has already been said, the police, and my own belief is that, so long as the British Army is responsible for the protection of India from external aggression and internal disturbance, so long will it be necessary to retain in the superior ranks of the police force a substantial British element.

"I may say also that the necessity for such an element has been recognised by every Commission which has taken evidence on the subject, and indeed by every member of every Commission. The observations of Mr. Justice Rahim and those of Mr. Mahadeo Chaubal have already been set out to this Council. It was the same in the case of the Police Commission of 1902. I quote a few words from the Minute of Dissent by the Maharaja of Durbhanga. 'We require Englishmen as well as Indians in the higher ranks of the police in the interests of good administration. I can only hope that the number of Deputy Superintendents appointed each year should not for the present be less than one-third of the number of Assistant Superintendents selected in India, and that the number will gradually be increased to one-half, if the experiment proves a success.' The Public Services Commission of 1886, in speaking of the value of European officers in this Service, said :—

'The absence of European officers was one of the causes, if not the main cause, of the abuses with which the police prior to the organisation of 1860 was universally charged, and although the present condition of the force is still far from all that could be desired, yet it is on the whole greatly superior to that which preceded it, and no step can be recommended in the direction of a return to the former state of things.'

"Now I mention these authorities to support the view that it was the introduction of British officers into this force that has contributed largely to its improvement in recent years. I do not for one moment say that this improvement is due solely to that cause. I know very well that there are many Indian officers whose work is above reproach. But I do say that a great deal of the credit is due to the British officers. I might quote observations to show that this improvement has recently been recognised by many weighty authorities. Sir Narayan Chandavarkar spoke of it recently. I have also with me a quotation from Lord Carmichael which shows how highly he appreciated this very body of police to whom my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea has referred......."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea :—"Not these men."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"There is also an appreciation by Sir James Meston which recently attracted some attention. I am glad myself also in this connection to bear my own testimony to the admirable and successful work of the Indian police service, and I include in that not only the superior ranks, but I include also those Indian ranks to whom my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Bannerjea has specifically referred, who have never, or seldom if ever, failed us in loyalty and devotion to duty. But I do maintain that a new morale and new methods have been introduced into the work of this Department by the British officers since the Police Commission's recommendations were accepted, and I contend that the progress has been attained without any loss of efficiency as regards checking crime, and that this has been effected largely by the European officers in the force and by the changes recommended by the Police Commission. I also urge that it would be a real disaster and a danger to India to do anything at this moment of all which might interfere with or impede further progress in that direction.

"Now this is one of my main objections to any system of simultaneous examination, namely, that it will make it impossible to maintain an adequate or even fixed proportion of European officers in the service. I hope that I will not be attacked as wanting in frankness by my Hon'ble friend Dr. Sapru; I have tried to make my meaning clear. I also believe that it would displace the class of recruits we now obtain by men of whose real capacity for police work we should have no guarantee whatever. Indeed, I think that the suggestion of the Hon'ble Pandit that the candidates for the police service should not be chosen in order of merit was to some degree an admission that a system of open competition was not entirely suitable for selecting the officers of this service.

"As to the alternative proposal of the Hon'ble Member, I can only say that the Government have arrived at no decision at present on this point, save the general decision to which I have frequently referred, namely, that they are anxious to enlist Indians, as freely as possible, into the various services. I admit quite frankly that this question must be considered from a new standpoint, that our progress in the direction of admitting Indians into this particular service has been very slow, and that we must be prepared to increase the pace even if this involves some loss of efficiency. I believe myself that the proper solution of this difficulty would be to increase the number of Deputy Superintendents who are promoted to the posts of Superintendents, so far as this is possible, with due regard to vested interests, and to recruit young Indians of suitable character, physique, temperament and education for a reasonable proportion of the posts of Assistant Superintendents. This will, I hope, give effect to the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's recommendation of 'stiffening' the European force by a proportion of Indians. Such a system would, in my opinion, enable the Government to get men of the stamp required for the police service. It would also make it possible to ensure that all communities and all Provinces were adequately represented in this important department of Government. The exact number of Indians who are to be admitted must vary in my judgment in the different Provinces, and progress in this service cannot for various reasons be as rapid as in others. In these circumstances, I am not prepared to admit, and cannot of course commit the Government to admitting, that an all-round rate of 50 per cent. is a percentage which we could accept. But I hope that the Council will believe me,—because it is really the intention of Government and we are honestly and definitely pursuing that policy,—when I say that this matter is engaging our present and earnest consideration, and that we have every desire to treat Indians fairly in this matter and to increase the number of Indians not only in this, but in all the services of Government, and here I pause to assure my Hon'ble friend Dr. Sapru that there is no question of banning them from any service. The number that can be admitted into any particular service must depend on the requirements of Government and the interests of the State. So far as is possible we are adding to the number of Indians in the service, but I cannot by any means guarantee, certainly not at present, that the percentage in the police service will be the figure or anything approaching the figure which the Hon'ble Member suggests."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri:—"Sir, I plead guilty to having made the remark about other than literary qualifications which elicited some disapproval from the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent. I am not less disposed than he is to attach importance to character, to the power to command, to the readiness to take responsibility and to maintain a high level of efficiency. I am at one with him in thinking that these qualities are not brought out by any system that human wit has yet devised of competitive examinations. My Hon'ble friend must explain to me how, when he objects to recruitment by competitive examination in India, he has not raised any objection to such a system of recruitment in England. I did not hear him say anything by way of disapproval of the system prevalent to-day—and in this very police service—of raising the English recruits by a system of competitive examinations. Does my Hon'ble friend maintain that in England, by some subtle process, the examiners are able to discover from the answer papers of candidates the qualities, mental and moral, of the candidates who have produced those papers? Over and over again in England the complaint has been made that the competitive examination is an imperfect test, if it is a test at all, of character. That is a phenomenon not peculiar to India. Competitive examinations in the one Continent and in the other lie under that fatal curse. If the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent had brought forward a solution for overcoming this difficulty in the case of the competitive examination in England, he would be perfectly justified in raising the objection to competitive examinations in India; but in so far as he has not ventured on that task—and for the very good reason that it is an impossible task—I must discount his objection to competitive examinations in India. But, Sir, the real point in the case of the Indian Police Service requires still to be brought out, and I propose within the few minutes that I shall yet have to lay bare what appears to me to be the crux of this whole question.

"It has been said that the British character and the British tone must be maintained in the Police more than in any other Service—more than even in the Civil Service. Well, I have learned to appreciate the British character. I know its strong points. I know also what qualities precisely are in the minds of Hon'ble Members when they speak of the British tone and the British character and the British standard of efficiency. I value them highly. But I wish expressly to ask whether it is the belief of exponents of this doctrine here that every single Englishman in the British Isles is a vehicle of this higher British spirit and this higher British character. Are they all swans that live in the islands of Great Britain and Ireland? Do competitive examinations bring all the top men out, the best men out, the most honourable men out? Sir, if it is necessary to maintain the British character in the Service, I venture to tell my Hon'ble friends on the opposite benches that they should take every care to bring into competition with Indian talent the best European talent. In the case of the Police Service they have a specially low standard of examination to catch the somewhat second-class candidate in England. You have the age of 19 as the entrance age for this examination. That is almost the school-leaving age. When you take people at that age and make them sit for a simple examination, with simple papers in Arithmetic, simple papers in English composition, you have certainly not devised the means for drawing out the best exponents of the British spirit, the best exponents of the British character. You run the very grave risk of catching more blanks than prizes in such a lottery, for an examination at that age is notoriously a lottery. And, Sir, I venture to go further and say that those run a serious risk of maintaining this competition at the one end and at the other of unequally yoked fellows, so long as they go on to say that in India we want the best Indians for the Police, but from England we are not so very particular about getting the very best.

"Now I proceed a little further. What are the actual facts? It is impossible, Sir, for the officials who speak for Government to-day, and for us on this side, to agree as to the facts. Indeed, I suppose this Council wishes to hear the truth spoken on every occasion, wishes to know really what is thougth in the most responsible Indian circles. On every question that we here consider, I venture to think that Hon'ble Members on the opposite benches will not feel it a disadvantage, will not certainly feel it as an affront to their feelings, if we state to them the exact way in which we feel on the subject under consideration. Now, with regard to the Police, the views that we hold are very divergent—in fact, I do not know if on the question of any other Service the views that we hold are so divergent as in the case of the Police; and therefore it is, however unpleasant it may be, that I have taken upon myself to state frankly what is thought among certain sections of Indian opinion competent to advise Government on this matter. Now, Sir, as much as Hon'ble Members on the other side we see the phenomena which we seek to appraise. We see the daily work of European and Indian officers. Now, if it is claimed that the work of the Police is a mixture of good and evil—and I do not suppose there is any one who says it is absolutely good —if the work of the Police be a mixture of good and evil, it is not right that credit should be claimed for the good while discredit is disclaimed for the evil. Both alike should rest on both wings of the Police force, European and Indian. We may differ as to the precise amount of good which may be ascribed to the European force and the precise amount of evil which may be ascribed to the Indian force—and there it is that, I am afraid, we disagree somewhat radically. Our opinion, Sir, distinctly is that if the Police is efficient to-day it is, in a very considerable measure, due to the personnel of the Indian element. I do not say nothing is due to the European, for the European force superintends and supervises; but I do say that the primary, the most difficult, the most dangerous part of the work is shared by the Indian with the European in honourable measure. Our contention is that if you want to improve the European force, as it certainly needs to be improved, you cannot do it better than by introducing a much larger Indian element into the personnel. I understand the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent, speaking for Government, is not against . . . ."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" Sir, I said quite clearly, if I may interrupt for one minute, that in stating the views I put forward I was expressing my personal opinion only. I thought I had made that clear to Council. If I failed to do so I have been guilty of a serious omission."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri :—" I take the correction. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent speaking for himself ventured to express the opinion cautiously that he would recommend an increase of the Indian element in the Police Force. Speaking for Government he was not able to give any such assurance; in fact, Government had come to no conclusion on the subject at all. Well, I am perfectly certain that when Government comes to examine the matter they will be prepared, with confidence, to increase the Indian element. Well, it is to the precise proportion that objection is raised. The introduction of the competitive examination, simultaneous examination, in India and England is viewed with suspicion, first, because it may not produce the desired class of recruit in India, secondly, because it may render it difficult to maintain the desirable minimum proportion of Europeans in the force. Well, if that is the ground upon which simultaneous examinations are opposed, what ground can there be for rejecting the last alternative which the Pandit has brought forward that one-half should be raised in India by a competitive examination to fill the higher ranks? As the Government have come to no conclusion upon this subject, it is not for me to assume that Government will reject it in the end. I will therefore found no argument on the supposition that that will be the case. But it is desirable that Government should know what is felt by us. Having stated it once, let me state it again to the Council, that we fear there is great need of introducing the best Indian talent into the Police Force, and if Hon'ble Members are anxious, as they apparently are, that the European section of the force should compete on favourable terms with this Indian element and maintain the British spirit and the British honour and the British character of which they are so justifiably jealous, let me tell them that they must contrive some means of bringing the best European talent into the force, as the present system is by no means suited to that end."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Sir, in replying to the criticisms that have been offered on my Resolution, I will first refer to the appeal made by Sir Hamilton Grant that a Resolution like this and the one I took up yesterday should not be introduced in this Session. I am as conscious as my Hon'ble friend that every day is full of fate; but I gave notice of this Resolution long ago, and I took it that the Government did not see any reason to ask that these Resolutions should not be taken up; and when Government did not suggest that there was any reason to run away from discussion of such subjects, we should not be held to blame if we do our appointed duty in the right time. The questions that have been raised may be very unimportant in the eyes of my Hon'ble friend. It may be very unimportant in his eyes for instance that in these days of hardship we are taking away a crore of rupees from the pockets of third-class passengers; it may be a matter of little importance to him; it did not appear so to me, nor is the question whether in the future, when the Government of India come to consider the report of the Public Services Commission, they should look at the Indian point of view in the right way a matter of indifference to us.

"Now, Sir, Mr. Kesteven spoke of the Resolution as one having for its object the elimination of the European or British officers from the Service; so also did the Hon'ble Colonel Aplin. I am sorry that the Hon'ble the Home Member also endorsed that view and has spoken of the Resolution as one the object of which was to eliminate the European British officers from the Service . . . ."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I did not say 'object'; I said 'result.'"

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"I thank my friend for the correction. Now, Sir, I must say that I am greatly surprised that these Hon'ble Members should give expression to such sweeping remarks as that. Mr. Kesteven spoke of this Resolution as intending a sweeping and drastic change. I was not prepared to hear from any Hon'ble Member of this Council that with the wording of the Resolution before him he would think that the result of the Resolution could be the sweeping change that these Hon'ble Members have suggested. What do we ask for? We ask that the age-limit should be raised in some respects; we ask that the pensions and salaries of officers of the Indian Police Service should not be enhanced; that the rule which requires that candidates for the Service should be of pure European descent should be abrogated without qualification, and that the examination should be held simultaneously in India and in England. If the last recommendation should not be accepted I suggest as an alternative that 50 per cent. of the appointments should be reserved for competition in India. Does that look like a sweeping change, having or likely to have the result of sweeping the British officer out of the Indian Police Service? I am sorry to note, Sir, that some of my Hon'ble friends showed a somewhat nervous attitude in dealing with this question. The Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven—and I am surprised all the more that a lawyer of his eminence should express such an opinion—spoke of the concern which the European population in Calcutta would feel if the Resolution were given effect to. Now, Sir, I did not imagine that he of all persons would think that the Resolution was going to bring about an entire substitution of Indian policemen in the Service during the next fifty years; and I thought he would also remember that the European residents of Calcutta owe the peace and security which prevails in Calcutta along with their Indian brethren somewhat to the action of the Indian policeman. And I thought that while the claim that we should not forget what we owe to the police was made he would remember also that the Indian policeman had a share of the credit which he wished us to give to the police. He also . . . . ."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kesteven:—"I thought I said, Sir, in my speech that I claimed a share for the Indian police also."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"Most certainly you did."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"My friend, Sir, said that we were all apt to forget how much we owe to the police; he spoke of the suppression of sedition and anarchical crime, and of work done by the police, and he referred also to the work done by the Indian members of the police force. I only wanted to emphasise the fact that Indian members of the police force in Bengal had put in a record which was as splendid as that of any police force in the world could be; many of them have laid down their lives in the discharge of their duty, duty done unfalteringly, duty done in the clear consciousness that their lives were at stake, that they were being followed and hunted by men whom they were trying to arrest; and in these circumstances not one, not two, but a number of Indians have discharged their duty.

"Now, Sir, I think if nothing else the work of the Criminal Investigation Department would establish the fact that Indians do possess that courage, power of command and that power of endurance, and all those other qualities to which the Hon'ble the Home Member so eloquently referred. But it would seem, Sir, that even this record is not sufficient to establish the claim of Indians to be regarded as fit for employment in the higher ranks of the Police administration in their own country. The Hon'ble Member from Burma spoke in the same strain, and he thought there was great danger of evil arising to the country if the Resolution were accepted, and he wound up by saying that at any rate in Burma there was no desire that the change should be introduced. If Burma does not desire the change, nobody would force it on the Province, but when the general question is raised it is not the view of Burma that has to be considered. The Hon'ble Mr. Fagan laid great stress upon the recommendations of the Commission of 1902. I submit, after the recommendations of this Commission, to say that it urged that British character and tone should be maintained is to argue in a vicious circle. We have heard the argument long, long enough, it has been repeated many times. That is the point at issue between my friends who take that view and ourselves. What is this British character, what is the British tone to which reference is made? I submit that it means nothing more or less than the possession of a good education and the possession of that character which is to be found in the average Englishman, as also in the average Indian, and in average people in other parts of the world Character is the result of education and of social surroundings, and I submit that when my friends lay too much stress upon it, they invite the criticism that not very long ago, the Police Commission in England reported very unfavourably about the police in England. The Hon'ble the Home Member has referred to the recommend ations of the last Police Commission. It should not be forgotten that until the reforms to which he refers were carried out tho policemen in this country did not possess anything like the character which they now possess. I submit that if the men who are appointed to the Service were wanting in education, if they did not possess the character required, they would not be able to render the account of themselves that they have rendered. Experience has shown this, so do not claim it as a monopoly of Englishmen the character—the qualities that they possess. They may have them, and there is the fullest acknowledgment of the fact, but for goodness sake, for the sake of justice that you love, do not deny the character which you claim to possess to your Indian fellows-ubjects who possess it in a similar measure, until they have been put to the test and given an opportunity to display their character. It is a matter for sincere grief that in this discussion Indian officers are said to be lacking in certain qualities which are essential to certain Services. If Indians are given an opportunity of showing whether they possess those qualities they will develop them. Now, Sir, there is no desire on my part to belittle the work of the police, but I fear that some Hon'ble Members have claimed too much for them, and particularly the Hon'ble the Home Member when he reminded us of the disorder which was found in this country when the British took possession of it. It seemed to me that he forgot, or evidently overlooked, the earlier reports of Police Commissions appointed by the Government and also their scathing remarks. Measure after measure was introduced to raise the character of the police in the higher ranks. Let, therefore, no claims be put forward for any particular section unless it is justified. We know from the reports of the last two Police Commissions that only recently there was great dissatisfaction felt with the personnel of the Police. We know that the systems of recruitment which had been adopted were condemned one after another. For instance, the Commission of 1886 wrote 'the system naturally supplies youths who have failed to succeed in examinations held in England and who come to India in the hope of securing a nomination to the Police by influence brought to bear on the nominating authority,' while some of the officers selected had turned out to be excellent, others on the contrary have taken years to become fairly efficient, and in some extreme cases have never become efficient at all. The system was abandoned and replaced in 1894 by a competitive examination. Charges were made against the officers appointed under the recommendations of the Commission of 1886. The Police Commission of 1902 said that 'the charges made against them are that they are often not well educated nor intelligent men, that their training is defective; that their knowledge of the vernacular is not such as to enable them to have free intercourse with the people; that they are too much in the hands of their subordinates; that their views are too narrow and their sense of responsibility too weak to allow them to pay due regard to complaints against their subordinates or to take due notice of misconduct. The Commission are of opinion that there is a great deal of truth in these complaints.' Now, Sir, I will not quote further the opinion of the Commission. I say you owe the purity and efficiency of the Police to the conditions under which you recruit the Service, and not merely to the fact that they are English lads taken from English schools. I know the English lad has many good qualities, I admire him, but I claim that the Indian lad too in his small way would be found to possess similar qualities. The Hon'ble the Home Member has told us that the Government is considering the matter, and that the opinions he has expressed to-day are his personal opinion. Even though he has made that clear it is still necessary that I should offer a few remarks on the opinions he has expressed . . . . ."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"May I remind the Hon'ble Member that he has one minute left."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Sir, I will save the Council that minute."

5-22 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I should like first of all to reply to the criticisms of the Hon'ble Pandit on my remarks as to the benefits of British rule in this country I understood him to maintain that the Police have had no part in this work of improvement . . . ."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"I never said that. The Hon'ble Member claimed a larger part than was justified by the facts."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"'A larger part than the facts justify.' I do not think I have done anything of the kind. I maintain that the Police have played a great part in the pacification of this country, and I contend that the defects of which there were complaints in the earlier days have been largely remedied by the introduction of European officers in 1861. I would point out that the figures and facts which he has quoted from the Police Commission's Report of 1902 do not refer to the present condition of affairs at all, but relate to a state of things which the Commission was appointed to remedy and which it did effectually remedy. What the last Commission of 1915 said was 'it has not been shown that the reforms have broken down; the evidence shows that they have been on the whole successful, but that hardly sufficient time has elapsed thoroughly to test their effectiveness.' I submit that, in these circumstances, it is hardly fair to quote the system which prevailed before 1902 to illustrate the arguments which the Hon'ble Member used. The Hon'ble Member, in another part of his speech, said that he repudiated the suggestion that Englishmen would be excluded entirely from the Service by his Resolution. I rather feel with the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru when he said that there should be more frankness in such matters. What is the object of raising the age-limit, of having simultaneous examinations? What would be the effect of these proposals? Does not every Member of this Council know, Sir, that the effect would be to exclude all

[13TH MARCH, 1918.] [Sir William Vincent; Pandit M. M. Malaviya; Mr. S. N. Bannerjea; Mr. Sastri.]

British candidates from any chance of success? I ask, I put it frankly, would not that have been the effect? It is useless to say 'I never suggested that British candidates should be excluded, that was not in my mind at all. I intended something entirely different'. The Hon'ble Member used soft words, but his intention was exactly what I say....."

The Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya:—"The words of the Resolution are there".

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Yes, the words of the Resolution are there, and they are for the Council to read. They recommend simultaneous examination and the raising of the age, and I do maintain that accepting this Resolution would have the effect which I have stated. When the Hon'ble Member says he does not mean this a Hindustani proverb comes to my mind which it would be impolite to repeat at this moment.

"He then went on to say 'what is this British character of which we hear so much?' Well I can tell the Council readily what this British character is. I have been frequently taunted in this Council with not explaining what I mean by the term, but if evidence of this effect is wanted I would say Si monumentum requiris, circumspice. Consider the state of this country now as compared with a hundred years ago. There is the real evidence of the value of British character and British administration, of how and why these results were attained. I will quote a passage from one who is greatly revered by many politicians, and by many others in India. I will read to the Council what Mrs. Annie Besant says of the value of British officials in India. I do not quote the lady as an authority on whom I place great value, but I have always understood that she is a person whose opinion is accepted with respect and even with reverence by many Members of this Council......"

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Bannerjea:—"What is the date"?

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"The date is 1911, I believe, but I am not sure. This is what the lady said:—

'They forget that the vast population of India, especially the villagers, constantly show preference to the English official over the Indian because the ordinary Englishman is more considerate of the poor, more ready to work to relieve distress than is the ordinary Indian. In the relief of famine the chief difficulties arise from the lower class Indian employes, not the educated Indians who work most nobly relieve suffering. The complaints of torture by the police are accusations against Indians. In the administration of justice, the Englishman judges fairly as between an Indian and Indian where the Indian is swamped by influences of kindred caste-prejudices and local customs; all this is known to and remembered by educated Indians and I am only repeating above what I have heard them say over and over again as to the substantial value of British rule.'

"Now these are not my words. Those are the words of this lady, and I simply ask the Council to consider them. Then the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri challenged me, saying you hold a competitive examination in England, but why won't you have it in India. Well, it is difficult to answer that question without saying what might wound feelings in this Council, and I am unwilling to do anything of that kind. But what I take to be the advantages of a competitive examination in England are these. Taking a number of candidates......"

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri:—"I do not draw the Hon'ble Member into making a statement which he would rather not make. He may rather not make it merely to please me. Let me not be understood to draw from him a statement."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I was only anxious to make it clear that I could answer the Hon'ble Member, but in the circumstances I refrain from saying more.

[Sir William Vincent.] [18TH MARCH, 1918.]

"The only other point I have noted here is a remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri as to the value of the work of Europeans in the Indian police. I understood him to suggest that the value of their work has been over-estimated, that the good work was really that of the Indian police, and that the candidates for the police were selected after an examination at an early age when the selection was little more than a lottery. I have tried to get the words down as accurately as I could. Well, I doubt whether it can be said that selection by examination at the age of 19 is in any sense a lottery, and I would ask the Council to remember that this is the age at which, I believe, candidates for scholarships for University are generally chosen, and it is the age which the recent Commission, which included at least one eminent educationist, deliberately selected as the suitable age for entering the Indian Civil Service. Now as to the value of the work of European officers in the police service, I can only ask the Council to weigh the testimony of every authority and of every Commission which has inquired into this matter and which has taken evidence on the subject. Their testimony is unanimous that the work done by the European officers in the higher ranks of the police has been of incalculable benefit. I do not wish in any degree to depreciate the work done by Indians. That is far from my purpose. I am well aware of the excellent work that they have done. It has been my good fortune to serve in many districts with them, but I do not think that it would be fair to say that the work in the higher ranks of the police done by Europeans is not largely responsible for the present improvement in that service. I regret, Sir, on behalf of Government for the reasons I have given I must oppose this Resolution."

The motion and the alternative motion were put and negatived.

The Council then adjourned to Thursday, the 14th March, 1918.

RESOLUTION.

PAPERS REGARDING LABOUR EMIGRATION TO THE MORE DISTANT CROWN COLONIES.

Delhi, the 23rd March 1918.

The following papers regarding labour emigration to the more distant Crown Colonies are published for the information of those interested in the subject :—

Extract from despatch from the Government of India to His Majesty's Secretary of State for India, No. 5 (Emigration), dated Delhi, the 23rd March 1917.

We have considered in Council your Despatch No. 24, dated the 11th February 1916, in which you expressed yourself entirely prepared to accept the policy advocated by the Government of India, namely, the abolition of the indentured system of emigration, and said that you would invite the Colonial Office to co-operate with you in devising the most suitable means for giving effect to it with due consideration of the interests of the Colonies affected and with adequate safeguards for the protection and well-being of the emigrants under any new system which might take the place of indentured labour. As you are aware, Lord Hardinge announced your decision by accepting in the Indian Legislative Council, on the 20th March 1916, the motion of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya that "early steps be taken for the abolition of the system of Indian indentured labour". Lord Hardinge was, however, careful to say that you had asked him to make it clear that the existing system of recruiting must be maintained until new conditions, under which labour should be permitted to proceed to the Colonies, had been worked out in conjunction with the Colonial Office and the Crown Colonies concerned. Towards the end of his speech Lord Hardinge expressed his deep gratitude to yourself and to His Majesty's Government, and added—

> "Their attitude in the matter fills me with assurance that what has been promised will be fulfilled to the letter, and that the end of the system which has been, relatively speaking, of so small an advantage to this country is now in sight. No one who knows anything of Indian sentiment can remain ignorant of the deep and genuine disgust to which the continuance of the indentured system has given rise. Educated Indians look on it, they tell us, as a badge of helotry. This is soon to be removed for ever."

Lord Hardinge's announcement satisfied those who heard him, for all believed that the period of waiting would not be long, and the Hon'ble Pandit in his reply said "the country will understand that a little time must elapse before the system can be entirely obliterated."

2. No suggestion was made in the Legislative Council that the period of waiting might extend up to five years, and we feel assured that no one who heard Lord Hardinge's announcement believed that there was a possibility that the ending of indentured labour might be deferred for so long a period. It came, therefore, as a considerable shock to popular expectation to find that a suggestion had been made by Mr. Bonar Law in the Colonial Office letter of the 21st February 1916, that a period—say five years—should be fixed after which no further recruiting under indenture should be allowed. In accordance with your instructions the Colonial Office letter of the 21st February has never been published by us in India, but knowledge of the suggestion made by the Colonial Office has filtered through from one or more of the Colonies concerned. The possibility that Lord Hardinge's promise might remain unfulfilled for a period of five years has roused deep-seated indignation throughout India and the Colonial Office letter has been a useful weapon in the hands of the speakers at public meetings.

3. The telegrams which have passed between us have informed you that there has been during recent months a persistent agitation throughout India for the immediate abolition of recruiting for indentured labour. Mass meetings have been held in all the great centres of population, and not only have the audiences been large, but they have included many, both Indians and Europeans, who are recognised as the leaders of thought in this country, but who are not usually willing to take part in public meetings.

4. The attacks made at all these meetings against the system of indentured labour may be briefly summed up in the charge that the system is one which is based at the outset on fraudulent statements made by the recruiter, and that the direct result of the system is the slavery of the men and the prostitution of the women. In charges made in general terms like these there is likely to be a good deal of exaggeration, but after making allowance for all possible inaccuracy and exaggeration, we find ourselves unable to deny that there is a substratum of truth in each one of the three charges which we have just mentioned. This is not a position which we can afford to allow to continue.

5. We have taken advantage of the present session of the Indian Legislative Council to invite representative Indians to formulate a scheme of assisted emigration to take the place of the present system of indentured emigration, and we laid before them copies of our letter of the 1st July 1916 to Local Governments and of the replies of the several Local Governments thereto. Some Members of the Legislative Council met and discussed this question among themselves for several days, but were unable to devise any scheme which in their eyes would be satisfactory. Eventually they handed us a memorandum (a copy of which is enclosed) signed by sixteen Members of the Council in which they state that in their opinion no alternative system is practicable which will carry with it a guarantee of the moral well-being of the Indian labourers concerned.

6. We feel the force of the arguments contained in the memorandum, and we are convinced that no solution short of that stated in the memorandum would satisfy Indian opinion on the subject, and that in the present state of heated feeling in the country the objections raised to the indentured labour system would be urged with equal vehemence against any other system recognised by the State under which labour was assisted or encouraged to emigrate to the four Crown Colonies.

7. Within the past few days it has been necessary for us for military reasons to impose a prohibition on the emigration of all unskilled labour. This is of course a temporary measure only, but it appears to us unthinkable that the system of indenture should be revived after the military necessities have passed away, and we earnestly ask for your support to secure the final ending of the system against which such grave accusations have been made. We consider also that in the circumstances it will not be possible for us to suggest the introduction of any scheme of assised emigration until the feelings of exacerbation to which the indentured system has given rise have died down. An interval must, in our opinion, in any event elapse between the abolition of the old system and the institution of any new one.

8. If these recommendations are accepted, it will be uncertain when a scheme of assisted emigration will be required. In view, however, of the arrangements which have been made for the holding of a Conference on the subject in the course of next May, it may be useful to set out the conditions which, in our opinion, must find a place in any scheme of assisted emigration, if such a scheme should be needed in the future.

9. The first essential in any new system must be that the emigrant should understand the invitation which the Colonies hold out to him. He must be told not only the daily wage which he is to receive, and the hours for which he is expected to labour for that wage, but he must also be informed of possible deductions from that wage and the cost of provisions and of clothing. The terms of repatriation must also be clearly made known to him. It is plain justice that these material facts should be disclosed under any future system, and if they had been disclosed in the past, there can be little doubt that only those who had some strong reason for wishing to leave their country would have offered their services as indentured labourers. As Lord Hardinge said in his speech before the Legislative Council on the 20th March 1916,

> "why should the labourer have to journey thousands of miles over the 'black water' to settle in a strange country and to place himself for a long period under conditions often of an undesirable, and in some cases of a revolting, nature in order to achieve the desired end, when he can obtain in India the choice of either better paid labour, as for instance, in the big jute areas of Eastern Bengal, or almost equally well paid labour with the prospects of obtaining in a very few years a home and a piece of land on the Assam tea gardens? It seems rather absurd to find a man going to Fiji for a wage of 26*s.* a month with rice at 2½ seers to the rupee, when he can readily earn 6*s.* or 7*s.* a week during the jute season in Eastern Bengal with rice selling at a third of the price prevailing in Fiji, with the additional advantage that he can, if he likes, with far greater ease, take his family with him to add to his earnings than in the case of distant Colonies. It is clear then that the cooly himself does not stand to gain much by emigration."

Our belief is that if the facts are made known Indian labour will not be found to be willing to leave this country except for a wage considerably in excess of the wage which can be earned here.

10. We now come to the question of the safeguards which should be required in the case of labour proceeding under any new system to the four tropical Colonies in question. We have examined the subject in correspondence with Local Governments and Administrations, and as stated above with reference to the views of the various representatives of Indian public opinion. We have also with your approval deputed Mr. Marjoribanks and the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. Marakyar to examine the conditions of labour in Ceylon and the Malay States with a view to considering whether a system of recruitment similar to that adopted for Ceylon and the Malay States might be adopted with advantage for the four Crown Colonies. These gentlemen have produced a valuable report, a copy of which we have now the honour to forward to you together with copies of the correspondence with Local Governments and of the other papers bearing on the subject.

11. In addressing Local Governments we expressed the view that any future system must conform to the following general principles :—

(a) a proper sex proportion must be maintained among adult emigrants;

(b) the labourer must have reasonable freedom to choose and change his employer;

(c) the conditions under which the labourer works and lives in the Colony must be suitable and proper; and

(d) recruitment in India must be carried on under due supervision and must be free from abuses.

12. As regards (a), we have already referred to the moral evils which undoubtedly exist and to the charge that is made that the present system leads directly to a life of prostitution for the single women emigrating to the Colonies which take indentured labour. The maintenance of a proper sex proportion has been one of the greatest difficulties under the present system and the low proportion of women hitherto recruited is, in our opinion, responsible for many of the worst evils connected with the condition of indentured labourers in the Colonies. The evils are, however, probably as much due to the class of women who form a proportion of the female emigrants as to the disparity in the numbers of the sexes. The sex question, in our opinion, cannot be solved by merely insisting on a larger proportion of women. Merely to raise the minimum proportion of women would probably have no other effect than to increase the number of undesirable women recruited. After careful consideration we are convinced that the only course which would be in any way satisfactory, would be to encourage recruitment by families. To effect this, it would be necessary to make a rule that no woman should be recruited unless accompanied by her family. We might also find it necessary to cause registering officers to make enquiries in the village of origin to check alleged family relationships. We do not think it would be necessary to prevent single men from emigrating alone; but agree with the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces (Sir Benjamin Robertson) that the number of such single men recruited should not exceed one to every five adults.

13. (b) The labourer's freedom of choice.—The aspect of the present system which, next to the position of women, excites the strongest popular resentment is the feeling that the status of the indentured labourer has been in the past virtually one of bondage, and that so far as the future is concerned, however much his condition may be mitigated by beneficent regulations and considerate treatment, the Indian labourer transported to the Colonies is not likely to be a really free agent. We share this feeling. The position of an ignorant peasant transported thousands of miles from his home, and serving an employer who has, at best, an imperfect acquaintance with his language and customs, is, we conceive, in danger of being one not far removed from bondage.

14. The inherent difficulty of this part of the problem lies in the distance of the Colonies from India and the consequent cost of recruitment. We recognise that the Colonies will reasonably expect some security for the cost of the passage money which they have paid, presumably, for the benefit of the emigrant. At the same time, the labourer should have the right ultimately to obtain repatriation. It is even more necessary that he should not be bound down to serve any particular employer for longer than a very short period. He should, we consider, be free to leave his employer on a month's notice, and this freedom should be guaranteed by entitling him to invoke the assistance of the Protector of Immigrants, if necessary, to ensure his transfer. We further regard it as essential that it should not be possible to proceed against labourers for failure to fulfil their contracts otherwise than by a civil suit. We recognise that the Colonies have already abolished imprisonment as a substantive penalty for labour offences, but it is no less important that punishment by fine and imprisonment in default of payment of fine should be similarly abolished for such offences. In short, Indian labourers should not be subject to any legal liabilities or obligations which do not apply equally to the rest of the population of the Colony, and which do not form part of the ordinary law of master and servant in England.

15. It is, we consider, a matter of importance that no employer should be able to claim that he had paid the expenses of recruitment of any particular labourer, and this, it appears to us, could easily be obviated by the payment of the expenses by the Government out of a common fund raised by a rateable cess collected from the employers. No part of these expenses should be charged against the labourer, who should start his career in the Colony free from any initial burden of debt. We see no necessity for any long-term contract between the labourer and the Government. The only contract which the labourer would enter into would be a short-term contract of service with his employer for the time being, whom, as we have just explained, he should be entitled to leave on a month's notice. With regard to the question of repatriation, we would suggest that the labourer with his family, if he has a family, should be entitled to a free passage to India after three years of approved service or a bonus in lieu of the passage-money if he should elect to remain in the Colony. A labourer wishing to return to India before the completion of three years' service should, we suggest, be entitled to one-third of the passage-money for himself and his family after one year of approved service and to two-thirds after two years.

16. (c) Conditions of life in the Colonies.—The assisted emigrant ought, we urge, from the date of his arrival in the Colony to have the same rights, including those of acquiring land, as any other free man arriving in the Colony. So far as the general conditions of life in the Colonies are concerned reforms are desirable in many directions. The recommendations of Messrs. McNeill and Chimmanlal in their report, including improvements in housing, medical assistance, hospitals, education, legal recognition of Indian marriages contracted in the Colonies, and other matters have, we are told, met with general acceptance in the Colonies, and are, we understand, largely in course of adoption.

17. (d) Conditions under which labourers are recruited in India.—We had originally been disposed to think that a system of recruitment similar to that adopted for Ceylon or the Federated Malay States might meet the case. In order to ascertain whether such a system would be suitable, as already stated, we deputed Mr. Marjoribanks and the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. Marakayar to examine the conditions of labour in Ceylon and in the Federated Malay States. We have, however, after examining the report come to the conclusion that recruiting for distant Colonies cannot be worked on the lines of the 'sardari' or 'kangani' systems or on that of the Federated Malay States. If any system of assisted emigration is to come into being, recruiting must, we think, be on generally similar lines to the present, but with substantial modifications in detail, and with a better class of recruiter working under officers of the Colonial Civil Service. The present class of recruiters should be replaced by men of good character, and as far as possible by men who have actually worked in the Colonies and can speak of the conditions from their own experience. All recruiters should be specially licensed, and should be on fixed pay and not paid by results. It is obviously necessary that the emigrant should start his career in the Colony not only free from debt in respect of his passage money, but also free from debt to the recruiter. The number of recruiters should, in our opinion, be kept as low as possible, and recruiting should be confined to the congested districts of India and should not be permitted at all in the industrial and pilgrim centres. There should, we think, be a real attempt to organise recruitment from villages; and selected non-officials, preferably chosen from among the honorary magistrates, should be entitled to inspect depôts. The physical and age tests should not, we think, be strictly applied to every member of the family, otherwise recruitment by families would in many cases break down, for the labourer would naturally be unwilling to leave behind those members of his family who had least ability to help themselves.

18. A reference is necessary in this connection to the arrangements governing emigration to Surinam and the French Colonies. We understand from the Memorandum of the British Legation at The Hague, dated the 1st May 1916, regarding emigration to Surinam, which formed an annexure to your despatch No. 140, dated the 8th September 1916, that the required notice of termination of the Convention of 1870 with the Dutch Government has been duly given, and that it remains merely to acquaint them with the details of the new arrangements as soon as these are settled.

Though indentured emigration to the French Colonies has been in abeyance and is not likely to be resumed, it appears to be desirable to take the present opportunity to determine the Convention of 1861 with the French Government.

19. We have, with your approval, invited Sir James Meston to represent the Government of India in the proposed Conference. We are also deputing Mr. N. E. Marjoribanks, I.C.S. and Colonel W. M. Kennedy, Chairman of the Assam Labour Board, who will be able to assist with information with regard to any matters of details which may arise.

Despatch from His Majesty's Secretary of State for India to the Government of India, No. 93 (Public), dated London, the 10th August 1917, and enclosure.

With reference to the letter of Your Excellency's Government in the Commerce and Industry Department, No. 5 (Emigration), dated the 23rd March last, I hope to be in a position in the near future to address you on the question of labour emigration to the British West Indies and Fiji. It was, as Your Excellency is aware, unfortunately impossible for Sir James Meston and Sir S. Sinha to remain long enough in England to take part in the actual inter-departmental conference, but my predecessor had the benefit of their assistance in an informal discussion of the general question with the Secretary of State for the Colonies and officials of the Colonial Office, and I share the satisfaction felt by him at their presence on this occasion.

2. The decision of His Majesty's Government that indentured emigration should not be re-opened, has already been communicated to your Excellency.

3. I now desire to invite the careful attention of Your Excellency's Government to the enclosed communication * from the Colonial Office. It was probably inevitable that other aspects of the position of Indians in the Colonies in question should absorb public interest in India, but it is evident that little attention has hitherto been paid in unofficial circles to the facts set out by the Colonial Office with regard to the free Indian population.

* Dated 7th June 1917.

4. One result of Indian labour emigration has been the establishment overseas of free Indian communities which have attained a high degree of prosperity. This fact does not, of course, affect the necessity for removing the system of indenture and substituting in its place an entirely new system of free emigration from India to the Colonies. It is, however, important to realise to what degree, even under the admittedly condemned system of indenture, those Colonies have successfully established thriving and self-respecting Indian communities of settlers whose welfare is now bound up with the general prosperity of those Colonies, and many of whom have been enabled to rise to the position of landholders, merchants, and, in some cases, professional men. The continuance of the main local industries is a matter of vital concern to Indians hardly less than to European colonists. To recognise the present position and needs of these Indian communities does not imply satisfaction with the indentured system now abolished.

5. It is further to be observed that the Crown Colonies which imported Indian labourers under indenture have never opposed any obstacle to the entrance of free Indian immigrants of the mercantile or other classes. The peculiar history of the Indian question in Natal under responsible government has possibly given rise to some misunderstanding on this point. But, as you are aware, Natal was alike the only self-governing Colony that imported indentured labour from India, and the only labour-importing Colony that restricted the entry of free Indian immigrants. In that case the supply of further Indian labour was eventually refused by the Government of India. But the British West Indies and Fiji have always maintained an open door for the entry of all British Indian subjects who desired either to travel or to settle down. I am not sure how far it is understood by public opinion in India that the prevention of the free emigration of Indian labourers to those Crown Colonies which imported indentured labour until the present year would not affect or concern any portion of the Empire which has imposed immigration restrictions upon Indians; and I see some inconsistency in an attitude that seems to combine protest against any restrictions on the entry of Indians into other parts of the Empire with opposition to the free emigration of Indian labourers to those Crown Colonies which desire to establish assisted immigration and to give the labourers full facilities for ultimate settlement on the land. The object of the inter-departmental conference is to devise a scheme under which Crown Colonies that desire to foster Indian immigration of this character may be able to arrange facilities for the emigration from India of persons belonging to the agricultural classes who may be willing to migrate as free labourers with the prospect of eventually establishing themselves on grants of land. It is an essential feature of any such scheme that it shall not reproduce under another name the old indenture system, and that future emigrants shall be enabled to find a career in their new homes without passing through the status which, in the case of their predecessors, is regarded as having inflicted a national stigma upon India.

6. In view of the misunderstandings which have blended with perfectly sincere and reasonable indignation at actual abuses connected with the indentured system, it seems very desirable that the above considerations together with such facts as are now presented in the statements furnished by the Colonial Office should not be lost sight of or their importance overlooked. Your Excellency's Government will no doubt take such action as may be possible to this end. I need hardly remark that they furnish strong reasons against the imposition of unnecessary barriers to the movement of unindentured labour under salutary conditions to Crown Colonies in which free and prosperous Indian communities are already established.

ENCLOSURE.

Colonial Office to India Office.

No. 26104.

Downing Street,
7th June 1917.

I am directed by Mr. Secretary Long to state that in the course of his recent informal conference with Mr. Secretary Chamberlain, Sir James Meston, and Sir Satyendra Sinha on the subject of Indian emigration to the West Indies and Fiji, he was led to believe that some misapprehensions exist in India as to the status of the Indian communities in the four Colonies. He desires, therefore, to invite the assistance of the Secretary of State for India in removing any false impressions which the people of India may entertain as to the position of their countrymen in the four Colonies concerned—British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji.

2. The conditions of employment of future emigrants are now a matter of discussion between representatives of India and of this Department, and Mr. Long does not think it would serve any useful purpose to enter in the present letter into any detailed discussion of the existing system or of that by which he hopes it will be replaced. But to remove all possible misunderstanding on a point of principle, he desires to state definitely that it is recognised both in the Colonies and at the Colonial Office that the indenture system must be abolished forthwith, and one more consonant with modern conditions substituted for it, before recruiting for the Colonies is resumed. He has only to add that, after consultation with representatives of the planting interests, and with their full concurrence, he had already decided before the recent meeting took place to propose on behalf of the Colonies the immediate abolition of the indenture system.

3. Mr. Chamberlain is already aware that the penalty of imprisonment for labour offences has been abolished in the four Colonies.

4. Recent controversy has concentrated attention on the position of the indentured labourer. This was probably in the circumstances inevitable. It is nevertheless unfortunate that as a consequence the existence of large and prosperous Indian communities in the Colonies as a direct result of the immigration system has been overlooked; and Mr. Long thinks that much of the feeling which has been aroused in India would have been avoided had not the distance of the Colonies and the lack of frequent direct communication prevented the people of India from having more accurate knowledge of the facts with regard to their fellow-countrymen who have settled in the Colonies.

5. The prosperity of these communities is bound up with that of the Colonies in which they have made their homes. If the industries of the Colonies suffer, the Indian communities will be the first to feel the effect. It is therefore desirable that their existence should not be overlooked by their countrymen at home when discussing a question so vital to the Colonies as that of the supply of labour which is essential to Colonial Industries.

6. Indians actually under indenture in the four Colonies form but a small proportion of the total Indian population there. How small the proportion is will be seen from the following figures:—

	British Guiana.	Trinidad.	Jamaica.	Fiji.
Total Indian population (1911 Census)	136,528	121,895	20,063	56,853
Under indenture (1915-16)	7,197	8,827	2,913	14,362

The proportion is, of course, larger in Fiji, as Indian immigration into that Colony began over 40 years later than into British Guiana. In the two Colonies which are mainly dependent on Indian labour the proportion of Indians under indenture is about 1 in 19 and 1 in 15, respectively.

7. Even of the labourers actually working on estates only a portion is serving under indenture. According to the latest figures available for Trinidad the number of adult immigrants not under indenture working on estates which also employ indentured labour was 15,676. The corresponding figure in British Guiana was 58,411. It will be seen that, leaving out of consideration estates which do not employ any indentured labour, by far the greater number on the Indian labourers employed on estates where the indenture system is in force are free from the restraints of that system.

8. Indian emigrants to the four Colonies have been recruited from the labouring classes in India, and have settled in Colonies engaged in producing a few staple kinds of estate produce, mainly sugar, fruit and cocoa. It would, therefore, be natural to expect that the Indian population in those Colonies would consist almost entirely of estate labourers. This, however, is not the case. It is probably not realised to what an extent the movement of population from India has been one of settlement of small proprietors on the land. In this connection the following quotations from the reports of the Protectors of Immigrants for 1915-16 are interesting:—

Trinidad.

"General Condition of East Indians not under Indenture.—The general condition of these people continues to be excellent. There are, to-day, many East Indians of independent means; some occupying positions of trust and honour in the Government service, and a few in the professions, law and medicine.

"Many are well-to-do merchants, while others still retain their affection for the soil, being either cane farmers or landed proprietors.

"The following table shows the amount of lands owned by East Indian proprietors and the nature of the cultivation.

"Acreage under Cultivation.	Nature of Cultivation.
56,414	Cocoa.
9,488	Rice.
9,368	Sugar cane.
9,698	Provisions.
3,081	Corn, etc.
1,740	Cocoanut.
408	Coffee.
117	Fruits.

"Settlement of unindentured East Indians on the Land.—There was considerable acquisition of landed property during the nine months under report, as appears from the following figures supplied by the Registrar, which deal with Chinese as well as Indians :—

	East Indians.		Chinese.
Number of purchasers	413		19
Number of deeds	454	Rs.	22	Rs.
Total value	$96,898·05 =	3,02,806	$48,336·00 =	1,51,047
The highest price paid for one property was	$12,800·00 =	40,000	$14,000·00 =	43,750

"Plantations Unity and Lancaster on the east sea coast of Demerara, some 415 acres in extent, having been drained, irrigated and laid out in acre lots, are now fully taken up, the purchase price of $20 (Rs. 62·8) per acre having been readily paid, and the cultivation of rice and ground provisions is proceeding satisfactorily.

"Drained and irrigated land can be obtained at Clonbrook, on the east, and at Windsor Forest, La Jalousie, and Hague on the west sea coast of Demerara, in some cases by purchase at prices varying between $15 to $35 (Rs. 47 to Rs. 109) per acre or by lease at rates from $1 to $3 (Rs. 3 to Rs. 15) per acre for the first year, rising to $5 and $6 (Rs. 15 to Rs. 18) per acre thereafter.

"In addition to these ways by which East Indians may acquire land, anyone, under the Lands and Mines Regulations, may lease Crown lands for terms of 99 years, with right of renewal subject to a re-assessed rent, if the land has been reasonably usefully held. The cost for five acres, for instance, is as follows :—

	$	Rs.
Cost of application	5·00 =	15
„ of survey	1·50 =	4½
One year's rent	1·00 =	3
Total initial cost	7·50 =	22½

"Rent thereafter $1 (Rs. 3) per annum for the whole five acre tract.

"For areas from 5 to 100 acres in extent the rent is 20 cents. (10 annas) per acre per annum; and for larger tracts less still.

"The settlements at Huis't-Dieren, Helena, Whim, Bush, Lot and Maria's Pleasure, comprising between them some 2,943 acres, have enjoyed fair prosperity during the period of report.

"The following figures give the number and value of properties in the several towns and villages owned by East Indians as assessed for taxation for local purposes :—

	Nos.	Value.
		$	Rs.
Georgetown (capital)	258	296,435·00 =	9,26,359
New Amsterdam	84	66,950·00 =	2,09,219
Villages	7,846½	732,009·20 =	22,87,529
Total	8,188½	$1,095,394·20 =	Rs. 34,23,107

"The establishment of Agriculture Loan Banks will be, doubtless, a great stimulus to and settlement. There are now three : one in the island of Wakenam, county Essequibo, in which 78 East Indians have 152 one dollar shares; another on the west coast, county Demerara, at Dem Amstel, in which six Indians hold 12 shares; and the third at Ann's Grove, east coast, county Demerara, in which 34 have 128 shares.

"There were 7,756 East Indian depositors on the 31st December 1915, and they had at their credit a sum of $393,348·27 (81,947*l.* 11*s.* 1½*d.*) (Rs. 12,29,213). Both the number of depositors and the amount of savings are less than on 31st March 1915, when the figures were : Deposits, 8,774; savings, $502,626·80 (104,713*l.* 18*s.* 4½*d.*) (Rs. 15,70,709). Circumstances arising out of the war have, no doubt, considerably affected Savings Banks transactions but the lately established Savings Bank branches of the Colonial Bank and the Royal Bank of Canada in Georgetown and New Amsterdam and in the two large villages of Mahaica and Rose Hall have without doubt attracted a considerable share of the business hitherto enjoyed by the Post Office Savings Banks. The continued expansion of rice planting is also responsible in some considerable measure, providing as it does a remunerative investment for the people's savings.

Jamaica.

"Occupation of free Indians.—There are now about 17,000 free Indians in the Colony, the majority of whom are employed in various manual occupations. Among these occupations may be mentioned the following :—

"Agricultural labours; planters, shopkeepers, market gardners, traders, itinerant and otherwise; goldsmiths, cart men; domestic servants. There are no less than 369 trade and spirits licences taken out by East Indians.

"Settlement of free Indians on the Land.—A statement kindly furnished by the Honourable Collector-General is attached showing the value and extent of property owned by East Indian immigrants in the Island. This statement is only approximate and does not fully represent the true value of the property. It is shown that land owned by East Indians covers over 11,000 acres. In the parish of St. Mary alone 2,276 acres of land is owned by Indians. I estimate that the accumulated wealth of East Indians in this Island cannot fall short of 120,000*l.* (Rs. 1,800,000).

"Savings of the Immigrants.

"Deposits.—The number of immigrant depositors in the Government Savings Bank on the 31st March 1916 was 1,383 and the amount at their credit was 15,700*l.* (Rs. 2,35,500). The reduction of the amount at credit compared with last year is largely due to the withdrawals by immigrants repatriated during the year. These immigrants who returned to India by the ship Ganges took with them drafts on the Bank of Bengal amounting to 2,824*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* (Rs. 42,374), and jewellery valued at 1,132*l.* 16*s.* (Rs. 16,992). This represents an average saving per head (exclusive of immigrants returned as destitute and children) of 32*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* (Rs. 487). The largest individual remittance was 283*l.* (Rs. 4,245).

"The statement alluded to is given below :—

"Native leases (i.e., leases of land by Indians from natives of the Colony).—Seven hundred and forty-two leases, comprising a total area of 5,744 acres, were registered in 1915, the largest total area leased in any province being 2,557 acres in Ba and Yasawas. The following table shows the number of leases issued and the area leased in each of the last nine years :—

"Deposits in Local Banks.—During the year fixed deposits were made by the Department in the local Banks on behalf of 106 depositors. The total sum at fixed deposit on the 31st December 1915 was 8,947*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* (Rs. 1,34,205), being 4,037*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* (Rs. 60,564) less than the previous year. The decrease is no doubt due to the outbreak of war, resulting in an unusually large amount of money being buried. The following table shows the amount on fixed deposit in Government Savings Bank by Indian immigrants on the 31st December in each of the last five years:—

Year.	No. of depositors.	Balance to credit. £ s. d.		Rs.
1911	50	1,422 17 2	=	21,343
1912	77	2,527 2 0	=	37,907
1913	159	4,725 14 5	=	70,886
1914	172	3,114 13 4	=	46,720
1915	156	2,177 3 5	=	32,657

"Remittances.—The amount remitted by Indian immigrants through the Treasury was 1,965*l.* 16*s.* (Rs. 29,487) sent by 350 persons. This amount does not include the amount remitted by Madras immigrants through the Treasury, which was 1,425*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* (Rs. 21,384) by 199 remitters, the average remittance for both Calcutta and Madras being 6*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* (Rs. 93). This total is exclusive of money remitted by immigrant passengers repatriated per S.S. Mutlah amounting to 843*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* (Rs. 12,658). The following table shows the amount remitted through the Treasury in each of the last ten years:—

Year.	No. of remittances.	Amount remitted. £ s. d.		Rs.
1907	587	2,996 12 4	=	44,949

"The following extracts from the reports of Resident Inspectors on the settlement of unindentured Indians in their respective districts may also be of interest:—

"The Indian cane-growers in this district did very well. The crops, if not heavy, were very sweet, and they also participated in the 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton bonus. The following are the figures you asked for in this connection:—

"The indentured banana cultivators appear to be in a very prosperous way; some are now drawing as high as 20*l*. (Rs. 300) and 25*l*. (Rs. 375) per month for their fruit. The rice crops also look very prosperous, and should give good returns."

Navua.

"The quantity of cane sent to the Navua mill by unindentured Indians was 28,597 tons, for which was paid 13,249*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. (Rs. 1,98,745). The area cropped was 1,366 acres."

An ordinance of 1916 makes provision for the acquisition of land by the Colony and its improvement at Colonial expense for purposes of settlement of East Indians.

The total number of Indian freeholders and tenants in the Colony is now 11,043 occupying 115,635 acres."

9. The extracts above confirm the report made in 1913 by Mr. McNeil and Mr. Chimman Lal, the Commissioners appointed by the Government of India to report on the condition of Indian emigrants to the Colonies, that "the great majority of the emigrants exchanged grinding poverty with practically no hope of betterment for a condition varying from simple, but secure, comfort to solid prosperity."

10. In 1885 the Secretary of State for India laid down, as an indispensable condition of emigration from India to the Colonies, that . . . "Indian settlers who have completed the term of service to which they agreed, as a return for the expense of bringing them to the Colonies, will be in all respects free men with privileges no whit inferior to those of any other class of His Majesty's subjects resident in the Colonies." That condition has been fulfilled. On the expiration of his term of service the Indian takes his place in the community on the same terms as other inhabitants of the Colony, and Mr. Long finds it difficult to understand how the idea could have arisen in India that the Indian communities in these Colonies stand in any degree in a position of industrial or political inferiority as compared with the rest of the population.

11. At the general election in British Guiana, in 1916, an East Indian, Mr. J. A. Luckhoo, was elected to the local legislature for the division of South-East Essequibo. The unsuccessful candidate was an English planter. Mr. Luckhoo is the son of an Indian immigrant and of an Indian born in the Colony. He practices at the local bar. His brother, Mr. E. A. Luckhoo, a solicitor, who has held office as Mayor of the Municipality of New Amsterdam, was an unsuccessful candidate at the same election.

12. There were other unsuccessful East Indian candidates at this election, and details of their careers may be interesting as illustrating the prospect open to East Indians in the Colonies. One unsuccessful candidate is an East Indian who arrived in British Guiana in 1865 at the age of seven. In 1878 he started business as a butcher and has been very successful. He is described as one of the richest East Indians in the Colony, owner of an estate on the west coast, and of a racing stable. Another candidate, the grandson of indentured immigrants, is a practising barrister in the Colony. Another, who is a shop-keeper in Georgetown, orginally came to British Guiana under indenture to an estate. Another East Indian, a merchant in Georgetown, was selected by the Negro and Portuguese sections of a constituency to contest the seat, but was found ineligible for election as he had neglected to register as a voter. This candidate was born in the Colony, being the son of indentured immigrants. He returned to India with his parents, but came back to British Guiana in 1891 and went under indenture to a plantation.

13. The East Indian voters constitute 6·4 per cent. of the total electorate. On the basis of population the proportion should be much higher, as the Indian community forms 40 per cent. of the population. The reason is that East Indians, although equally eligible with other races both for the municipal and for the legislative vote, often do not trouble to go through the formality of registering themselves as voters. It is, however, anticipated locally that, as a result of the recent general election, there will be more disposition on their part to exercise the franchise.

14. The Legislative Council of Trinidad is not an elective body, and there is therefore no legislative franchise for any race in the Colony. One of the unofficial members nominated by the Crown is of East Indian descent. There is now an elective Town Council in Port of Spain, the capital of the island, and East Indians are, of course, fully eligible for the municipal vote and for membership. The Council is a very recent institution, and no statistics of East Indian voters are available.

15. In Jamaica the Legislative Council is partly elected. East Indians are eligible to vote for and to serve on the Council, as well as on the Parochical Boards which manage local affairs; but, as they form only 2 per cent. of the total population, their political activity is naturally less in evidence than in British Guiana. No statistics as to East Indian voters are available.

16. The question of Indian representation in Fiji has recently been under discussion with the Government of India, and Mr. Chamberlain is aware that, at their suggestion, the constitution of the Colony has been altered to admit of the appointment of a nominated member to the Legislative Council. The Governor has now appointed Badri Mahraj who originally came to Fiji as an indentured immigrant and has since acquired considerable property and controls several hundred acres of cultivated land as well as a general store business.

17. Mr. Long trusts that the Government of India will take steps to make public, in such manner as they may think appropriate, the facts mentioned in this letter.

Extract from despatch from His Majesty's Secretary of State for India to the Government of India, No. 117-(Public), dated London, the 21st September 1917, and enclosure.

I have given very careful consideration in Council to the letter of Your Excellency's Government in the Commerce and Industry Department, No. 5-(Emigration), dated the 23rd March last, in which you set forth your conclusions on the subject of labour emigration from India to the more distant Crown Colonies. I agree with your view as to the unfortunate effect in India of the suggestion that indentured emigration might remain in force for five years more, a suggestion deprecated at the time by my predecessor [see the fifth enclosure to his Despatch No. 63-(Public), dated the 14th April 1916]. As you have been informed, His Majesty's Government have decided that indentured emigration, temporarily prohibited on account of urgent military needs, cannot be resumed. I trust that you have been able to secure for this decision as wide a publicity, especially in those quarters which are not reached by English newspapers, as was obtained by the earlier reports.

2. I agree with Your Excellency's Government that any new system of emigration must be free from suspicion of liability to the three charges brought against the old system—that it was based on fraudulent recruitment, that it involved slavery for men, and that it resulted in the prostitution of women.

3. The letter of Your Excellency's Government was laid before the Inter-departmental Conference which after a session lasting some six weeks, has drawn up a new scheme for a system of free emigration assisted by the Colonial Administrations. Advance copies of its Report have already been despatched to you, and I have in my telegram of the 24th July recommended that it should at once be published for general information and discussion. The Colonial Administrations concerned have represented the necessity for early publication of the Report in view of the condition of uncertainty prevailing amongst the interests affected. I now enclose 25 further copies. I have no wish to prejudice the full consideration which you will give to the scheme, and I think it essential that the people of India should be afforded every possible opportunity of examining a subject which is regarded as vitally concerning their national self-respect. The scheme is provisional, in the sense that it is necessarily one to be judged on the one hand by Your Excellency's Government, and on the other by the Colonial Administrations. Should the latter, or any of them, consider that the increased expenditure which its adoption will necessitate would make it unprofitable to employ imported Indian labour under the new conditions, the assisted emigration question, so far as India is concerned, will necessarily disappear in connection with such colonies or colony. If, on the other hand, you are unable to regard the scheme as regards any particular detail or details as satisfactory from the Indian point of view, I shall of course give full weight to your criticisms, and shall communicate them to the Colonial Office. Apart from questions of detail, the scheme as a whole appears to me to fulfil the conditions laid down in your Government's letter, as affording a means of enabling Indian labourers to emigrate to those colonies which desire to attract them, as eliminating so far as is humanly possible unsatisfactory features in the engagement of emigrants in India, and as securing for the emigrant labourers work under conditions of freedom, with facilities for repatriation if they do not desire to settle. The encouragement of family as opposed to individual emigration affords the only sure means of guaranteeing the moral welfare of the Indian communities overseas. I shall proceed later on to analyse and comment upon the details of the scheme. But at this point I would like to observe that the proposed scheme differs fundamentally from the present system. In place of indentured labour it is now proposed to establish a scheme of colonisation and one, I would add, that goes considerably beyond not only the requirements laid down by Your Excellency's Government, but also any scheme of assisted emigration hitherto devised for European settlers in the Dominions, since the latter have never been granted systematic State assistance if they desired to repatriate themselves after experience of colonial life.

4. The Indian claims have been met by the Colonial Office in a liberal and sympathetic spirit, and I would invite your particular attention to the fact that the benefits in the way of material and medical comforts, and other safeguards provided under the old system for labourers who had covenanted under indenture to work for a term of years, are under this scheme continued for labourers who are entirely free, and as to whose readiness to work the colonies have no such guarantee as was provided by those indentures.

5. I regret that Your Excellency's Government were unable to derive more assistance from those members of your Legislative Council whom you invited to discuss the question. You state that you feel the force of the arguments contained in the memorandum presented to you. But I am somewhat surprised to see that, though the signatories appear unconscious of the fact, and though it is not noticed in your letter, most of these arguments, if analysed, are applicable as much to free emigration to Ceylon and Malaya as to a reformed scheme of emigration to more distant colonies. Yet I understand that no real or reasonable objection is entertained to emigration to Ceylon and Malaya as such, though details have given rise to complaint, and it is indisputable that the Ceylon and Straits emigration is of far greater importance, and plays a far larger part in the economic life of India, than the numerically unimportant emigration to the West Indies or Fiji. As regards the latter, the fear that an invidious distinction would arise in the colonies between old and new immigrants—a fear not justified, as far as I know, by the experience of the abolition of indentures in the Malay States or in Assam—is met by the stipulation in the new scheme that the cancellation of all indentures is a necessary preliminary to the inception of free assisted emigration to any colony.

6. But consideration of this memorandum leads me to think it desirable, before proceeding to discuss the scheme in detail, to set down some general considerations which have not, I think, been presented, at any rate in full force, to public opinion in India.

7. I have already, in my Despatch No. 93, dated 10th August, commented on the extremely misleading, though not surprising, confusion between the self-governing Dominions and the Crown Colonies which underlies much that is said or written on the general question of emigration from India. While it is to be hoped that the attitude taken by the Dominions towards the question of India's representation at Imperial Conferences, and the actual proceedings at the recent Imperial War Conference, will tend to closer and more sympathetic relations between India and the Dominions, the political and economic objections entertained in the Dominions to the unrestricted entry of fellow-subjects whose standards differ so widely from those of the new countries must be expected to remain. It is natural enough that India should resent any proposal that her labouring classes should be imported for special local purposes and under exceptional conditions into territories which are not open to the general immigration of Indians. But no such question arises in the case of the Crown Colonies; Fiji and the British West Indies are as free to the Indian merchant or professional man as Ceylon or Malaya, while they have offered more favourable openings to Indians who desire to settle on the land. It is surely important that the distinction should be brought home to those who write and speak on the question of emigration, but I have noticed wide-spread and genuine misunderstanding.

8. The growing sense of Imperial solidarity is producing a wide feeling that the Empire as a whole cannot be indifferent to the prosperity of any of its component parts. The great sugar and other agricultural industries are not merely a matter of local concern to the colonies in which they are established but of real importance to the economic strength of the British Empire. I need hardly say that considerations of this kind, whether political or economic, cannot be allowed to stand in the way of the removal of actual abuses or the redress of real grievances. But they become relevant when indignation at abuses arising in particular localities out of certain features of the indentured system now abolished has developed into the doctrine that free Indian emigration under carefully devised safeguards should not be allowed to any country, Malaya excepted, in which Indians formerly worked under indenture. If the abuses are eliminated, and a free system of assisted emigration, coupled with a generous scheme of land settlement, is substituted for the old indentured system, this doctrine cannot be admitted either in the interests of the Indian people themselves, or as a principle of general policy. Its acceptance would constitute a new departure, wholly at variance with the principles as regards emigration and colonisation prevailing in all other parts of the Empire. The colonies in question have now a considerable number of Indian settlers, and it would be unfair to these to prevent more of their fellow-countrymen from joining them. It is probable that under the scheme now proposed some of the colonies will become largely Indian in population and character. This is a very important consideration and one that must have weight with Indian opinion.

10. I realise that any attempt to reintroduce indentured emigration under a new name would be rightly resented, and I do not under-rate the difficulties that surround the subject. But I would ask you to consider very carefully the present legal position. Emigration to the four British Colonies and Surinam is for the time being suspended by an order under the Defence of India Act. But when the war ends, and this emergency power is exhausted, the Emigration Act will at best enable you only to prohibit emigration under indenture to those Colonies. There is no power under that Act to declare unlawful or to restrict or regulate free or assisted emigration where no agreement to labour is entered into by emigrant before leaving India by sea. Unless the Act is amended, or is supplemented by another Act, emigration under such conditions as are suggested in the Report of the Conference, could not be prevented, but it would be unregulated, and would necessarily lack the supervision by Government officers which the Report contemplates.

11. Simple repeal of the present Emigration Act will therefore not meet the situation. Legislation in some form will be inevitable, and it is possible that you will be asked to prohibit the emigration of unskilled labourers who receive assistance to emigrate on the understanding that they will enter upon agreements overseas. But apart from other considerations, it would be difficult to prevent evasion of the provisions in such a bill discriminating between persons induced to emigrate in order to work on estates in the West Indies, and such free emigrants as have in the past gone in considerable numbers from the Punjab to Canada, South America, and the Far East, often in the hope of obtaining employment as manual labourers. The question requires very careful examination, and I trust that Your Excellency's Government will consider it fully. There is the further point to be borne in mind that you may be asked to modify the present system under which labour emigration to Ceylon and Malaya is free from any legal restriction or supervision. While I can understand your reluctance to undertake special legislation that could be represented as framed merely in the interests of Fiji, I greately doubt whether you will not in the obvious interests of India find it necessary to deal afresh by legislation with the whole system of labour emigration. If and when free assisted emigration is opened, you will find it necessary to possess the penal powers conferred by the present Act in order to deal with possible malpractices by emigration agents in India.

12. It is obvious that the interests, agricultural and industrial, chiefly represented in the Legislative Councils, will not be anxious to see inducements held out to Indian labourers to leave the country. The passage from Lord Hardinge's speech quoted in the 9th paragraph of your letter appears somewhat to over-rate the actual mobility of labour within India. The option of migration to the jute areas of Eastern Bengal for part of the year, especially if it involves the expense of transporting his family, has not, I should suppose, presented itself with marked force to the labourer in remote parts of Madras. Temporary emigration to Malaya or Ceylon is far easier. But the local landholder, who has had a supply of labour available at low wages, is probably as reluctant to see labourers leave his district for Malaya or Eastern Bengal as for the West Indies. He has not been allowed hitherto to veto their emigration, but the feeling aroused by highly coloured accounts of the condition of Indians in distant colonies has produced objections based on philanthropic grounds which coincide somewhat closely with certain private economic interests. It is admitted that the labourer has the right to leave his district, and even to leave India, if he thinks that he can better his condition, but it is argued that emigration to distant colonies involves his degradation. I do not see that such a result necessarily follows under a carefully guarded system of colonization. As regards the past, the arguments appear to be based on reports about Fiji, and it is not clear why they should be held applicable to Trinidad or British Guiana.

13. I am not concerned to give an artificial stimulus to emigration from India, and the scheme now offered limits the functions of the Indian authorities to the supervision and inspection necessary to prevent abuses.

14. I now pass to the scheme itself. Its cardinal feature is the prominence given to provisions for encouraging the settlement of Indians in these colonies. The principle that the object of the indentured system should be "permanent colonisation, not the introduction of labour, much less of cheap labour" was enunciated by Lord Crewe in his Despatch to the Government of India, No. 83, Public of 17th May 1912, and was reiterated in his later Despatch No. 3, Public, dated 3rd January 1913. The Conference has adopted Lord Crewe's "main principle" as the guiding principle of its new scheme of free emigration, and has coupled with it terms of repatriation intended to provide liberally for the case of an immigrant who for any reason may desire to return to India and prefer not to take advantage of the facilities offered him for settling in the colony. While the emigrant who wishes merely to stay a short time in the colony can freely utilise the new arrangements, the Conference was convinced of the greater importance of encouraging the emigration of permanent settlers. The cost of the introduction of each emigrant will be increased greatly under the new scheme; and while the colonies are prepared to pay this price for permanent settlers they would find it financially impossible to continue to pay it for the temporary labourer. The Conference there had advisedly introduced into the new scheme no special provisions to attract casual labour, and believes that the attractions offered will induce most immigrants of this class eventually to settle in the colony.

15. The scheme contemplates that on his first arrival the emigrant will undertake work for a "probationary" period under selected employers. All experience has shown that when an Indian first lands in a colony he is quite unfit to enter immediately upon the life of a settler. He requires to learn colonial ways of life and work and colonial methods of agriculture. It may even be that through the change in climatic conditions he may develop symptoms of ill-health or of disease requiring medical treatment which if left to himself he would never be in a position to obtain. A "probation" of six months is therefore provided under selected employers in selected, mainly agricultural, industries.

16. The Protector of Immigrants will select for each immigrant his first employer, and will no doubt be guided in his selection by each man's individual circumstances, and particularly by such a fact as that he already has friends or relations on any particular estate. After the first six months the immigrant will be perfectly free to move from one employer to another at a month's notice, and even during the first six months he can always be transferred by the Protector to another employer should the Protector see reason to move him. During this probationary period the immigrant will learn how to work; he will learn colonial methods of agriculture; he will live under proper medical supervision and in healthy houses and surroundings; he will receive free rations for his wife and family in certain conditions; and in return he will provide voluntarily the labour upon which the prosperity of the colony depends. This part of the scheme appears to me to be essential in the interests of the immigrant during the early period of his residence in a new country.

17. The Conference entirely agreed with the conclusion stated in paragraph 15 of Your Excellency's Despatch of the 23rd March, that it was essential that all the expenses connected with the introduction of the immigrant should be borne by a common fund. Its proposal complies with this principle, but it found it difficult to lay down precisely the method by which the common fund should be raised. The objection that any rate levied from the employer operated indirectly to handicap the immigrant in competition with other labour was fully recognised. It has been sought to reduce this handicap as far as possible by limiting to the immigrant's own lifetime or to a period of years the time during which an employer would be liable to pay the contribution. Three alternatives have been proposed. It will be for the colonies to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of each and decide which they will adopt.

18. As the immigrant will be entirely free to choose his employers it is essential in his own interests that the Colonial Government should have power to decide who may and who may not employ him. This is secured by the provision that suitable persons will be entered in a Register of approved employers by the Protector of Immigrants, and that any person not so entered who employs an Indian during his first three years of residence will be liable to prosecution. At the same time, in order to make this provision as little restrictive as possible of the area within which an immigrant may seek employment, the only qualification required for obtaining entry in the Register will be that the employer can provide conditions of employment and living which the Protector considers satisfactory. It is felt that during the early years of the colonist in a new country this provision will be an advantage as guaranteeing for the worker protection somewhat analogous to that provided by the Factory Acts in this country. After three years, when the colonist has become acquainted with the conditions of his new home, it will no longer be necessary.

19. The Conference has laid down in outline a settlement scheme which contemplates that one department of the Government in each colony will be responsible for helping the immigrant in every way to settle upon the land should he after at least three years' experience of life in the colony decide to do so. The conditions of grant and other details could necessarily only be stated in very general terms, but the Conference attached the greatest importance to a properly regulated settlement scheme to facilitate the settlement of Indians on the land, and hoped by stipulating that a definite department should undertake this task, that a serious attempt will be made in each colony to systematise settlement and to remove needlessly obstructive regulations wherever they exist. The Conference believed that this was the most vitally important of all its proposals, and that if worked in the spirit in which it has been drawn up, it will have far-reaching consequences not merely in securing the happiness and prosperity of the Indian immigrants, but in developing the natural resources of the colonies and enabling them to take a more important position in the Empire. If Your Excellency's Government so desire, I shall be glad to confer with the Secretary of State for the Colonies as to the more detailed arrangements that it will be necessary to make for the development of land settlement in the colonies concerned.

20. That the above belief is well founded has already been amply proved by the condition of those colonies where the settlement of Indians has made most progress. And if it can once be realised in India what an extremely important part the domiciled Indian community already plays in such colonies as Mauritius and Trinidad, and may equally play in the future in the other colonies also, there can hardly be room for doubt that the objections to emigration raised by Indian public opinion upon the grounds that these representatives of India come before the world as bondsmen and slaves will speedily disappear, now that the objectionable feature of the indenture has been removed and the emigrant goes as a free man under one of the most liberal schemes of emigration that has ever been devised in any country.

21. On the other hand, to meet cases where the immigrant may decide that a colonial life does not suit him and wishes to return to India, the Conference has agreed upon generous terms of repatriation which mark a distinct advance upon the terms at present prevailing, especially upon those for the West Indies where only a half passage is granted after 10 years. The terms proposed by Your Excellency in your letter of the 23rd March last received most careful consideration, but the Conference found itself unable to accept them. After discussing the question from every point of view, it came to the conclusion that to lay down such very short periods as qualifying for assisted and free passages would in fact be a grave error which might seriously imperil the success of the whole scheme. The Conference was deeply impressed by the consideration that after one year's residence, and indeed to some extent even after three years' residence, the immigrant will hardly have acquired sufficient knowledge of the prospects offered by life in the colony to resist the immediate inducement of a return to India, even though his return before he has been able to make appreciable savings involves poverty. The opportunity of returning would come at the most critical period of an immigrant's residence, and there can be little doubt that many good colonists would be lost, and many emigrants debarred from the prospect of a prosperous career, by an offer of too speedy repatriation. Short periods for repatriation would in fact be inconsistent with the principle that a sound immigration system should have for its object permanent colonisation, not merely the introduction of temporary labour. Indeed, on the ground of the probable enormous cost, the Colonial Office was quite unable to agree to such short periods for repatriation, and to have insisted upon them as you proposed would have created an impossible situation for which the India Office representatives could see no justification in principle. A system under which emigration means merely the transit of labourers to a distant country and their speedy return before they have had any real opportunity of even material benefit, seems to me open to grave objections and certainly detrimental to the emigrants' self-respect. Indians would, it is true, have ceased to bear the stigma of indenture, but the position of a migratory labourer is not one that inspires respect. The terms now conceded by the Colonial Office are far more liberal than those at present in force, and when it is remembered that the whole trend of policy in recent years has been to curtail the grant of repatriation, the terms now proposed by the Conference must be considered the most satisfactory that could be expected.

22. The report makes it clear that the old indentured system is abolished. Future emigrants will be entirely free to work for whom they please, subject to a six months' probationary period and subsequently to a month's notice of leaving. Provision is made at the same time that all existing indentures shall be cancelled, and terms of repatriation have been drawn up for labourers whose indentures are thus cancelled. These terms necessarily could not be quite so generous as those for future immigrants. Persons who emigrated under the old terms definitely accepted them and cannot reasonably expect to be placed in exactly the same position as regards repatriation as persons coming under the new terms: but at least none obtain worse conditions, and some obtain very much better conditions, than under the indentured system, while all alike receive the great concession of the cancellation of their indentures and participation in the settlement scheme.

23. The difficult sex problem received close attention. In framing its recommendations the Conference had always before it the evils brought to light in the past and endeavoured to guard against their recurrence. One of the conditions laid down in your letter is that a proper sex proportion should be maintained, and from the moral standpoint the most essential condition for the acceptance of any scheme undoubtedly is that it shall secure this. But definite measures devised to attain this end have not in the past been successful. The attempt, by fixing a definite proportion of women to men, to prevent inequality of the sexes has been proved by experience a failure. It was perhaps hardly realised how difficult it must be under the conditions of early marriage prevailing in India to secure that adult single women of respectable antecedents should take part in emigration, and in practice the chief result of the rule was to force recruiters to seek out women who were either of bad repute, or were involved in domestic troubles, to make up the required proportion. The Conference has not only advisedly refrained from repeating this provision, but it has also prohibited the assisting of unprotected women to emigrate. It was, after close consideration, found impossible to introduce any provision that single men should only be assisted to emigrate in strict proportion to the number of families emigrating. It was feared that a provision of this kind would be evaded by underhand methods, difficult of detection, and possibly giving rise to further abuses, while such a provision would make it difficult for men to emigrate with the idea of sending for their families later if they desired to settle permanently in the colony.

24. The Conference believed very strongly that no artifical rules of this kind will remedy the disproportion of the sexes without creating as in the past further evils, and that the only satisfactory solution of this problem lies in encouraging in every possible way the emigration of families. The greatest emphasis has therefore been laid upon the necessity for encouraging the emigration of married couples with children, and particularly with young marriageable daughters who may become in the colonies the wives of other immigrants. To encourage families to emigrate provision has been made for the grant of free rations to children during their first year of residence, and it has been declared that non-working dependents will not be rejected merely on account of old age or because they are physically unfit for work. But here again no definite rules can be laid down, and the attainment of the object in view will depend mainly upon the action of the controlling staff who must show their subordinates in every possible way that they regard success in this respect as of the utmost importance.

25. The proposals regarding the emigration staff in India follow mainly the lines of the present organization, but the unsatisfactory bonus system has been abolished as the method of payment of the "emigration agent," though the possibility of small extra grants of money to reward meritorious work during the year has not been overlooked. A grade of Inspectors between the Emigration Commissioner and the emigration agents is provided for in cases where the agents are too numerous or too scattered for the Commissioner to supervise them properly alone. The Conference felt that there already existed in the District Magistrate and his local subordinates a sufficient local inspecting agency, and it did not see that any good purpose would be served by a formal proposal to increase the number of inspecting agencies; but it will be always open to you to set up any further inspecting machinery that may seem to be required.

26. The Conference discussed the question of confining emigration to particular areas in India, as proposed in your letter, but did not see its way to make precise provision for this, though the advantage of obtaining an immigrant population homogeneous in language and customs was fully recognized by the Colonial Office representatives. While it seems probable that emigrants will in the future be attracted chiefly from Madras, the Conference did not desire to isolate the Hindustani communities now in the colonies by recommending an arbitrary restriction. In regard to depôts the proposals provide that both the district and the central depôts shall be perfectly open, and that emigrants shall be under no restraint whatever while staying in them. Your suggestion that non-officials should be appointed as visitors to depôts was willingly agreed to by the representatives of the Colonial Office.

27. The social and political conditions of emigrants in the colonies engaged the attention of the Conference, and proposals have been framed on the subject of education, marriage and divorce, and political rights. Education, as the Conference points out, is already widely diffused in the West Indies and the same position is being reached in Fiji. The proposals as to registration of marriage mark a distinct advance upon the present law and will, it is hoped, provide immigrants with an easy method of legalising marriages performed according to their own customs, while the proposals as to divorce are intended to restrict indiscriminate divorces and yet provide a simple method of legalising such as cannot be avoided. On the question of representation in the Fiji Legislative Council, the Fiji Government have already made a valuable political concession, and are prepared to consider the possibility of placing Indians on the same terms as Europeans.

28. This summary of the recommendations of the Conference is not exhaustive, but points not discussed above, such as the suggestion that Indian surgeons might be employed on emigrant ships, seem to require no explanation. I am confident that Your Excellency's Government will accord the scheme your careful and unbiassed consideration, and that you will not fail to view it in connection with the wider Imperial aspect already alluded to by me. I would invite your special attention to the enclosed letter* in which the Secretary of State for the Colonies discusses the Report of the Conference.

* 26th July.

29. The recommendation as to periodical visits by persons nominated by the Government of India was included because of the desire of the Colonial Office to give all possible facilities for watching the welfare of the emigrants ; but it will, of course, be for the Government of India to decide as to the despatch of their representatives.

30. As regards emigration to Dutch and French colonies, I am in correspondence with the Foreign Office on the question of procedure. I agree that the revival of actual emigration to the French colonies is impossible ; but, taking certain other considerations into account, I am not at present convinced that the formal determination of the Convention of 1861 is desirable.

31. The position as regards Surinam is different, but you will agree as to the impossibility, if the Netherlands Government should desire to import free immigrants under a new system, of allowing emigration to foreign territory until the economic needs of British colonies are fully met. Apart from this, the new scheme of colonisation and land settlement could not well be applied or enforced in foreign territory. It therefore seems unlikely that it could in any case be extended to Surinam.

32. I desire to express my appreciation of the help given to the Conference by the extensive knowledge and willing industry of Mr. Marjoribanks, Indian Civil Service, and Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy, C.I.E., and to inform you that in Mr. R. H. Ellis, Indian Civil Service, the Conference found a most competent and energetic secretary. I have already expressed my regret that Sir James Meston and Sir Satyendra Sinha could take part only in informal preliminary discussion, but I know that my predecessor was able to take advantage of their presence in this country in putting before the Secretary of State for the Colonies the Indian point of view, and that their expression of opinion produced a marked effect.

ENCLOSURE.

Colonial Office to India Office.

No. 35794.

Downing Street,
26th July 1917.

I am directed by Mr. Secretary Long to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant enclosing the Report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Assisted Emigration from India to British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji.

2. Mr. Long notes that the Report recommends to the Government of India and to the Governments of the Colonies concerned the establishment in future of a scheme of aided colonisation which would be entirely free. He would welcome the abolition of the existing system of indentured emigration and all the features of that system, whether social or political, which have given rise to so much adverse criticism in India and have been regarded as repugnant to Indian national self-consciousness ; and he is aware that the representatives of the industries concerned take the same view. He desires to place on record the fact that before the expression of feeling in India became so pronounced the Colonies had shown every disposition to meet Indian opinion in the matter so far as it is possible to do so.

3. In particular I am to point out that the Colonies concerned are anxious to afford Indian immigrants exactly the same legal, political and religious rights, 'privileges and duties as are afforded to the other inhabitants of whatever race. They wish to add sufficient material advantages to attract a supply of labour sufficient to maintain their industries and to furnish trained Colonists; but it is impossible to increase these advantages beyond a point which the industries can bear; and I am to express Mr. Long's opinion that these offered under the proposed scheme approach, if indeed in some cases they do not exceed, the limit of expenditure which, on any reasonable assumption of prices, the greater part of the staple industries, especially sugar, can afford.

4. The encouragement of the emigration of whole families, which is in itself a desirable feature of the scheme, will make the proportion of passages to working emigrants higher than under the existing system, especially as the women will be under no obligation to work and non-working dependants are not to be rejected medically merely on the ground of physical incapacity or the score of age. Further, the substitution for the present system of five years' labour under indenture, of a period of three years' free work under an approved employer followed by liberal provisions for settling on the land will in all probability necessitate the introduction of a larger number of labourers annually if an equivalent labour force is to be maintained. Also the experience of Assam points to the aggregate productivity of the labour force being reduced by the provision of attractions such as the extra garden ground and allotments contemplated by the proposed scheme. Mr. Long would emphasize that the effect of these different proposals will be cumulative and they will thus greatly increase the cost of introduction: In addition, the proposals for improved housing, for the issue of free rations to children and to pregnant and nursing women for a minimum wage based on the cost of living and other minor concessions will all involve additional expenditure.

5. An equally important factor which again is cumulative in its effect is the fact that the cost of passages will be much higher after the war. It is impossible to give an accurate forecast of the amount or duration of the increase, but enquiries that have been made point to the probability that the actual contract price for passengers will be for some years as much as 100 per cent. higher than the minimum pre-war figure. The serious effect of this increase will be appreciated when it is stated that the cost of passages at the cheapest rate to British Guiana had by 1916 already risen to 16*l*. as compared with 11*l*. 12*s*. 6*d*., the cost of passages to the Colony before the war, and the rate to Fiji had increased from 6*l*. under a contract made in 1913 to 15*l*. under a special contract made for the year 1917.

6. The higher cost of passages will for some years add very considerably to the expenses of repatriation, which will also be affected by the increase in the assistance to be given for return passages, by the shorter period of residence after which such assistance will be forthcoming, and by the greater number of introductions and consequently of repatriations. Experience alone can determine how far these factors will be offset by the numbers of immigrants induced to stay in the Colony by the local land settlement schemes.

7. Mr. Long does not put forward the increased expense as a reason for rejecting or modifying those provisions of the scheme from which it arises. Indeed he welcomes those provisions on their merits. But as the question of cost is not one on which the Government of India can easily obtain first-hand information, he thinks it well to bring to their notice an aspect of the scheme which might otherwise escape consideration. It is for this reason that he has felt it right to call attention to the gravity of the financial aspect of the problem since, if the burden imposed on the industries is too heavy, the effect will be widespread, particularly in the sugar industry. Many natives of India are already operating as sugar planters, and the proportion of cane produced by Indians increases yearly. The failure of the staple industries of the Colonies concerned would most seriously affect the fortunes of the Indian settlers, now by far the most numerous section of the Indian communities concerned.

Ordered that a copy of the above Resolution be forwarded to all Local Governments and Administrations, in continuation of Resolution No. 10294, dated the 1st September 1917, and that it be published in the supplement to the Gazette of India.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

PAY, ALLOWANCES AND FINANCE OFFICERS
Compensation.

Simla, the 7th March 1918.

Resolution re the substitution of a rule for rule VIII of the rules for the grant of Exchange Compensation Allowance.

RESOLUTION.

The rule below is substituted for rule VIII of the rules for the grant of Exchange Compensation Allowance published with the Finance and Commerce Department's Resolution No. 2422-Ex., dated the 31st May 1897 :—

"The percentage fixed for any quarter is applicable to all salaries actually drawn during that quarter. Thus the percentage for the July to September quarter applies to salary drawn between the 1st of July and the 30th of September.

When salary is drawn for a portion of a month, exchange compensation is admissible only for that portion of the month, and the maximum monthly limit, if applicable, must be proportionately reduced."

2. The new rule will have effect from the 1st December 1917; but salaries which were due for payment before, but were or are drawn after, the 1st December 1917, will carry Exchange Compensation Allowance at the rate in force before that date.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE AND AGRICULTURE.

Season and Crop Prospects for the week ending Saturday, 16th March 1918.

Burma.—The week was practically rainless in Upper Burma. Cultivation of spring rice and other crops and harvesting of miscellaneous crops continue. Standing crops are good. Cattle are generally healthy. The price of unhusked rice in Rangoon has risen slightly but is below normal. The market for white rice is quiet at Rupees 230 for specials.

Assam.—The weather was generally seasonable. More rain is wanted in places. Harvesting of mustard is almost finished. Pressing of sugarcane, pruning of tea and ploughing for autumn and winter rice and jute still continue. Sowing of autumn rice has commenced. Outturn and prospects of crops are generally fair to good. Cattle disease is reported from three districts. The price of common rice shows a tendency to rise generally.

Bengal.—Light rain fell during the week in a few places. More rain is, however, urgently wanted throughout the province. Planting of sugarcane and harvesting of spring crops continue. Sowing of autumn crops is being retarded for want of rain. The average price of common rice for the province has risen by about 0·6 per cent. as compared with that of the preceding week.

Bihar and Orissa.—The week was practically rainless. Pressing of sugarcane continues. Harvesting of spring crops, planting of sugarcane and preparation of lands for the next season's crops are in progress. Standing crops are generally doing well but rain is needed in several districts. The price of common rice has risen in three districts, fallen in six and remained stationary in the remaining districts as compared with that of the preceding week. Cattle disease is reported from thirteen districts. The condition of standing crops in the Feudatory States of Orissa is fair.

United Provinces.—With the exception of light showers in a few places the week was rainless. Harvesting, threshing and irrigation of spring crops, pressing, sowing and irrigation of and preparation of land for sugarcane, sowing and irrigation of extra crops and extraction of opium continue. Standing crops are doing well. Condition of agricultural stock is good and little cattle disease is reported. Fodder continues to be dear in parts but is generally available in sufficient quantities. Prices are falling.

Punjab.—Moderate rain has fallen in parts of the central and submontane tracts and light rain elsewhere except in a few south-eastern districts. It has proved very beneficial to standing spring crops and to the sowing of extra spring crops. Standing wheat and other crops on irrigated areas are everywhere in average to good condition. Unirrigated crops are either average or below average and more rain is wanted for them. Extra spring and sugarcane crops are being sown to a normal or below normal extent. Cattle are generally healthy but fodder is scarce in some districts. Prices are generally stationary and range between warning and scarcity rates except in the south-east where they are between normal and warning rates. Prices of wheat :—Rawalpindi 6½, Lahore 7¾, Ambala and Ferozepore 8¼ and Lyallpur 9 seers per rupee.

North-West Frontier Province.—Rain fell throughout the province. Prospects of spring crops are generally average. Sowings of tobacco, sugarcane and extra spring crops have commenced in some places. Wheat—Peshawar $7\frac{1}{16}$ and Dera Ismail Khan $9\frac{6}{16}$ seers per rupee.

Jammu.—Prices are fluctuating slightly. Rain was general. There is nothing else noteworthy.

Central India.—Slight showers fell in Indore and Malwa. Spring crops are being irrigated and harvested. Land is being prepared for autumn crops in Southern States. Standing crops and probable outturn are fair to good. Agricultural stock is generally good. Prices are high.

Kashmir.—The week was generally wet and cool. Standing crops in Baramulla and Mozaffarabad are in fair condition. Cattle are generally healthy. Prices are high in Mozaffarabad and normal elsewhere.

Rajputana.—The weather was cloudy. Irrigation of spring crops is nearing completion and harvesting is commencing. Prospects are good. Cattle are in good condition. Prices are falling slightly.

Central Provinces.—The weather continues to be warm and cloudy but nights and mornings are still cool. Balaghat received half an inch of rain accompanied by hail stones. Light showers fell in five other districts nowhere exceeding 16 cents. Spring production is estimated as good in Chhattisgarh, fair to good in Nagpur, Berar and parts of Jubbulporo and Nerbudda divisions and poor in Seoni, Hoshangabad, Betul, Chindwara and Harsud tahsil. Harvesting is in progress. Gram sells cheaper by 3¾ seers per rupee in Damoh. Other variations are insignificant but generally show a slight fall.

Feudatory States.—Reaping of spring crops continues.

Bombay.—Slight rain fell during the week in parts of Sind, Kolaba, Kanara, Nasik, Panch Mahals, Ahmednagar, Satara and Belgaum. Standing crops are good except in parts of Larkana and Hyderabad, Thar and Parkar where they have been slightly damaged by rain, rats and insects. Spring harvesting continues. Cotton picking is progressing in Gujarat, West Khandesh, Carnatic, Kathiawar, Baroda, Cutch and Kalkapur. Agricultural Stock is sufficient. Prices of food grains are generally steady.

Hyderabad.—Slight showers fell in parts of Aurangabad, Bhir, Nander and Usmanabad districts. Spring harvesting continues. Crop conditions are the same as reported last week. Late rice is fair and is being weeded. It suffered from blight in parts of Nalgonda. Cattle are healthy. Prices of grains in districts are the same as last week but juar sells at 5 seers only in Bhir, Parbhani and Bidar districts.

Mysore.—The week was rainless. Standing crops are good. Harvesting of dry and wet crops is proceeding. Outturn is fair. Cattle are generally healthy. Prices are generally stationary.

Coorg.—The weather was hot. Picking of coffee and threshing of rice is nearing completion. Cattle are generally healthy. Prices of food grains are high.

Madras.—The week was rainless. Standing crops are fair to good generally. Harvesting of paddy, sugarcane and dry crops is proceeding with outturn fair to normal generally Sowings of paddy, sugarcane and dry crops are proceeding normally. Condition of cattle is generally good. Prices are fairly steady.

TRADE BY PROVINCES.

The total imports and exports, including re-exports, of private merchandise into and from the several maritime provinces during the month of February 1918, as compared with those of January, 1918, are stated below :—

	IMPORTS		EXPORTS, INCLUDING RE-EXPORTS
	January, 1918	February, 1918	January, 1918	February, 1918

Under imports, Burma alone showed an increase of 98 per cent, while Bengal showed a decrease of 26 per cent, Bombay of 7 per cent, Sind of 23 per cent, and Madras of 14 per cent. Under exports, Sind showed a decrease of 48 per cent, Bombay of 33 per cent, Burma of 12 per cent, and Bengal of 2 per cent, and Madras of 42 per cent. These comparisons are with the preceding month (January, 1918).

BALANCE OF TRADE.

The following table takes into account the imports and exports of merchandise on private account only, as well as the value of wheat, tanned cow hides, and other articles of national importance exported on Government account :—

In the eleven months ended February, 1918, the excess of exports over imports of private merchandise was R68,90 lakhs, as against R80,61 lakhs in the corresponding period of 1916-17, and R57,12 lakhs in 1915-16. As the publication of treasure figures has been temporarily discontinued, it is not possible to give here the net (private) exports from April to February, nor the net balance of trade in the same period. It may be of interest to note that the net (private) exports are considerably below those of 1916-17 and also below those of 1915-16. The balance of trade, so far as shown by the statistics of merchandise, treasure, Council Bills, and enfaced Rupee paper, in the eleven months ending February is in favour of India, though not to so large an extent as in the corresponding period of 1915-16 and 1916-17.

(a) Include the value of wheat, tanned cow hides, and other articles of national importance exported on Government account.
(b) Approximate rate for Telegraphic Transfers.

The amount of Council Bills and Telegraphic Transfers paid in India in the eleven months ended February, 1918, was about R44,33 lakhs, of which over R2,14 lakhs were paid through the Gold Standard Reserve, about R10,93 lakhs through the Paper Currency Reserve, and R31,26 lakhs through the Treasuries. In the eleven months ended February, 1917, the amount was over R41,48 lakhs, of which over R5,43 lakhs were paid through the Gold Standard Reserve, about R27,04 lakhs through the Paper Currency Reserve, and R9,01 lakhs through the Treasuries. In the eleven months ended February, 1916, the amount of Council Bills paid was R24,54 lakhs. As regards enfaced Rupee paper, about R12 lakhs represented the amount of paper enfaced to London, and R94 lakhs the amount re-transferred from London, in the eleven months, April to February, 1917-18, while in the corresponding period of 1916-17, over R44 lakhs represented the amount of paper enfaced to London and R90 lakhs the amount re-transferred from London.

As compared with the corresponding month of the previous year (February, 1917), under imports, the declared unit value of cotton twist and yarn rose in February, 1918, by 49 per cent, and of cotton piece goods, grey by 60 per cent, white by 31 per cent, and coloured by 30 per cent, while sugar fell by 16 per cent. Under exports, raw cotton showed an increase of 35 per cent, while indigo showed a decrease of 29 per cent, and raw jute of 35 per cent.

The customs duty figures are an index to the volume of the import trade only, since under exports jute, rice, and tea only are subject to duty. In the eleven months ended February, 1918, the import duties increased to nearly R11,10 lakhs from about R8,97 lakhs in the eleven months ended February, 1917, and the export duties rose to R2,91 lakhs from R2,17 lakhs. The grand total of gross Indian sea and land customs revenue (excluding salt revenue) in the eleven months, April to February 1917-18, amounted to R15,13 lakhs, as compared with R11,65 lakhs in the same period of last year.

RAILWAY STATISTICS.

Railway statistics, like the import and export statistics above, are a valuable index to the general movement of trade throughout the country, and show that the earnings from 1st April to 2nd March, 1917-18, were R69,03 lakhs, as against R63,69 lakhs in the corresponding period of 1916-17, or an increase of R5,34 lakhs.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 18, 1918.

Second WHEAT Forecast, 1917-18.

This forecast is based on reports received from provinces and states and refers to 98·5 per cent of the total wheat acreage of India. The statistics, therefore, cover all the important wheat growing areas. The condition of the crop referred to below relates to that prevailing in the latter part of February.

The total area sown amounts to 34,469,000 acres as against 32,856,000 acres (the revised figure) at the corresponding date of last year, or an increase of 5 per cent. The total area in the final forecast of last year (published in August, 1917) was 32,940,000 acres. It may be noted that the increase in acreage now estimated as compared with the first forecast (at the end of January) is 2 per cent.

It will be seen that the area this year, as against that on the corresponding date of last year, shows an increase of 57 per cent in Delhi, 23 per cent in Rajputana, 22 per cent in Central India, 15 per cent in the North-West Frontier Province, 12 per cent in Bombay and Sind, 3 per cent in the Punjab, 2 per cent in the Central Provinces and Berar and 1 per cent in Hyderabad. On the other hand, Ajmer-Merwara shows a decrease of 32 per cent, Bihar and Orissa 7 per cent, Bengal 3 per cent, and the United Provinces 2 per cent.

General condition of the crop.—The present condition of the irrigated crop is reported to be good. The unirrigated* crop is suffering through drought owing to the inadequacy of the winter rains, particularly in parts of the Punjab, Delhi, and the North-West Frontier Province, and rain is badly wanted in these parts. Owing to the very copious monsoon of 1917, and its beneficial effect on the seed-bed, the unirrigated crop has so far not suffered so much as it would have done in an ordinary year in which the winter rains have been short.

Punjab (33·3 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The revised estimate of the area sown in British districts amounts to 10,294,000 acres, which is about 3 per cent above the estimate made at this time last year. The area in the Native States is now estimated at 1,279,000 acres, which is 4 per cent larger than the corresponding estimate of last year. The combined area of British and Native territory (11,573,000 acres) shows an increase of 3 per cent as compared with the estimate made at this time last year. Except for very light rain in the third week of January in most districts, in the fourth week of that month in the south-east, and at the end of February in the western sub-montane tracts, the weather remained practically dry. The condition and prospects of the irrigated crop is everywhere good; they are better than last year in the Canal Colonies owing to a more ample supply of water, although the supply is now becoming rather short. The unirrigated crop in the central and western districts is suffering from drought, and its condition is below average. Elsewhere it is so far about normal. Rain is wanted all over the province. Frost has damaged the crop more than usual. Rust attack is about normal. There are indications that the absence of cultivation last summer owing to heavy rains may eventually diminish the outturn, especially in the sub-montane tracts.

United Provinces (22·8 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—In the first forecast the total area was estimated at 7,050,000 acres as against 7,200,000 acres at the corresponding date of last year. No change has been made in this estimate. Some rain fell in the western districts in the latter half of January. In the Upper Doab it was generally heavy and beneficial to the crops; elsewhere it was too light to have any appreciable effect. February was rainless up to the date of report (26th). The irrigated crops are everywhere promising, although they have been slightly affected by the high winds prevailing during the second fortnight of February. The unirrigated crops have suffered on light sandy soils, but, in consequence of the late rains in October, are, on the whole, better than in most years in which no winter rains are received. In the Meerut, Agra, and Allahabad divisions a normal yield is expected. In Rohilkhand, Oudh and the Benares Division, mainly owing to insufficient preparation of the land, the outturn will probably be below normal. For the provinces as a whole, the average outturn on present conditions is estimated at 90 to 95 per cent of the normal. [This relates to the condition of the crop up to the 24th February.]

Central Provinces and Berar (11·6 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The area sown in British districts is now estimated at 3,776,000 acres (397,000 acres being in Berar) which is about 2 per cent above the estimate made at this time last year. The area sown in the Native States of Khairagarh and Nandgaon is estimated at 132,000 acres as against 130,000 acres, the revised estimate of last year. The combined area of British and Native territory (3,908,000 acres) shows an increase of 2 per cent as compared with the corresponding estimate of last year. Since the issue of the first forecast in January occasional cloudy weather, cold winds, and above all the absence of winter showers, and the consequent lack of moisture in the soil have damaged the crop in parts of several districts, and considerably reduced the prospects of a large outturn. The average outturn for the Central Provinces and Berar, as a whole, is estimated at 85 per cent of the normal. On this basis the total yield of the province (excluding Native States) is estimated at 860,000 tons, as against 1,095,000 tons estimated at this time last year. A normal outturn is expected in the Native States of Khairagarh and Nandgaon.

(a) Including Native States (b) Revised figure

Bombay and Sind (7·8 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 2,880,000 acres (564,000 acres being in the Native States), which is 12 per cent above the estimate made at this time last year. In the Presidency proper, rust has appeared in places, and the weather conditions have generally been favourable. The crop is progressing fairly well everywhere. In the north and middle portions of Sind the unirrigated crop is suffering through want of moisture. On the Jamrao and Fuleli canals the irrigated crop is being damaged by rats. Elsewhere the crop is doing well. The expected outturn is estimated at 75 to 100 per cent of the normal in Gujarat and Kathiawar. In the Deccan the yield is expected to be above or about normal in Khandesh and most parts of Nasik and Nagar, and 65 to 85 per cent elsewhere. In the Karnatak and the Southern Mahratta Country States the estimates range between 65 and 85 per cent in the east and between 85 and 100 per cent in other parts. The Sind crop is expected to yield from 60 to 80 per cent of the normal. The season has been late and harvesting has only commenced in some places in the Deccan and the Karnatak. [The estimates are up to the 15th February.]

Bihar and Orissa (4·2 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The area sown is reported to be 1,224,000 acres, which is 7 per cent below the estimate made at this time last year. The decrease is due to excessive rain at sowing time. In January scanty showers fell all over the province, except in Patna and Darbhanga. The weather conditions were mostly favourable in the beginning of the season, but owing to lack of winter rains the crop has suffered to some extent in several districts of Bihar. The condition of the crop is reported to be fair to good, but straw except in the riverain tracts will be very short, and grain small. The average outturn for the province is estimated at 93 per cent of the normal.

North-West Frontier Province (3·3 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown up to the end of January is estimated at 1,214,000 acres, which is 15 per cent above the corresponding estimate of last year. The increase is general and is due to timely rainfall at sowing time as well as to the grant of special advances to cultivators for the extension of wheat cultivation. The condition of the standing crops is generally average at present, but rain is badly wanted throughout the province, especially for the unirrigated tracts in Bannu, where crops are withering for lack of rain.

Bengal (0·4 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown this year is estimated at 124,000 acres, which is 3 per cent short of the estimate made at this time last year. Since the issue of the first forecast, the weather has been too dry for wheat in most parts of the province. The average outturn is estimated at 70 per cent of the normal.

Delhi (0·1 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 55,000 acres, which is 57 per cent above the corresponding estimate of last year. The condition of the standing irrigated crops is good and that of unirrigated crops fair. Rain is badly wanted in parts.

Ajmer-Merwara (0·04 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 17,000 acres as against 25,000 acres reported at this time last year. The probable character of the harvest is reported to be good and the outturn is expected to be normal.

Central India (9·4 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown is estimated at 3,851,000 acres as against 3,153,000 acres estimated at this time last year, or an increase of 22 per cent. The condition of the crop is reported to be generally good. The detailed figures are as follows :—

Hyderabad (2·9 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 1,151,000 acres as against 1,143,000 acres reported at this time last year. The condition of the crop is reported to be fair to good. The average outturn is estimated at 75 per cent of the normal.

Mysore (0·01 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The area sown is estimated at 4,000 acres, which is the same as reported at this time last year. The condition of the crop is reported to be generally good.

Chart.—The chart below shows the second estimates of acreage and the final estimates for the last nine years for the whole of India.

(a) Provisional, as estimated in the first (January) forecast.

It will be seen that the winter rainfall is generally below normal, especially in the Punjab.

Wheat in foreign countries.—From the latest information published by the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, it appears that the area sown with wheat in France indicates a considerable increase on that of last year at this period. The area sown with wheat in Australia is estimated at 10,016,000 acres, as against 11,525,000 acres in 1916-17.

From unofficial sources it appears that in the United States of America rain and snow have fallen practically throughout the winter wheat belt, including the droughty south-western area. In Australia the crop is expected to yield 3,214,000 tons and the surplus available for export is estimated at 2,143,000 tons. The problem of marketing is very difficult and it is reported that the New South Wales Government is considering the advisability of helping growers to produce meat instead of wheat. Fine favourable weather is prevailing in the Argentine, and the surplus available for export is estimated at 3,000,000 to 3,500,000 tons.

This statement is compiled from returns furnished half-yearly by Registrars of Joint Stock Companies. From a comparison of columns 2 and 3 with columns 15 and 16, it will be seen that at the end of December 1917, the total paid-up share capital of companies registered under the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913) in British India amounted to about Rs. 94 crores and the debenture capital of such companies over Rs. 12 crores, showing a net increase of Rs. 3·6 crores in paid-up share capital, and a decrease of nearly Rs. 1 crore in debenture capital, as compared with the preceding half-year ending June, 1917. In the paid-up share capital Bengal shows a net increase of Rs. 2,68,08,000, the Punjab of Rs. 46,73,000, Madras of Rs. 22,89,000, Delhi of Rs. 13,02,000 and Bombay of Rs. 10,29,000, while the United Provinces show a net decrease of Rs. 12,34,000. In the debenture capital Bengal shows a net increase of Rs. 10,09,000, while the United Provinces show a net decrease of Rs. 1,03,59,000 and the Punjab of Rs. 3,75,000.

The following statement compares the total paid-up share and debenture capital in British India at the end of the half-year of report with the preceding half-year, the corresponding half-year of the previous year, and the pre-war half-year ending June, 1914 :—

	Share capital	Debenture capital

Since the outbreak of war there has been a steady increase in the paid-up share capital of companies registered under the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913) especially in the year 1917.

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA

Director of Statistics

Published by order of the Governor-General in Council

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA.

TRADE FLUCTUATIONS IN SELECTED ARTICLES IN JANUARY, 1918.

The object of the tables appended is to show the quantities of the principal staples of agricultural produce imported from the various provinces, etc., and from foreign countries into the ports of Calcutta, Bombay, and Karachi, and into the Madras ports during the month of January, 1918, and for the ten months, April to January, 1918, as compared with the corresponding periods of 1917. The statistics include foreign sea-borne and coasting trade as well as inland (rail and river-borne) trade. They have been furnished by Collectors of Customs, Steamer Companies, Railway Audit Officers, the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta, etc.

TRADE FLUCTUATIONS IN JANUARY, 1917 AND 1918.

It will be seen from table I, that the imports by rail, river, and sea in January, 1918, as against the corresponding month of 1917, show (in round numbers) an increase of—

425 per cent in tea

(43,383,500 lbs. as against 8,255,900 lbs. last year),

94 per cent in gram and pulse

(91,000 tons as against 46,900 tons last year),

(18,200 tons as against 9,500 tons last year),

50 per cent in jute

(519,500 bales as against 346,600 bales last year),

(8,700 tons as against 5,900 tons last year),

7 per cent in raw cotton,

(385,800 bales as against 361,800 bales last year), and

4 per cent in rice (including paddy)

(125,900 tons as against 120,900 tons last year).

It will be seen from table IV (wheat, excluding wheat flour) that the principal sources of the imports in January, 1917 were the Punjab, the Central Provinces and Berar, and the United Provinces. During the corresponding month of 1918, the Provinces from which the ports received their supplies were mainly the United Provinces (44 per cent of the total), the Central Provinces (22 per cent) and the Punjab (13 per cent).

NOTE.—One bale of cotton or jute is equivalent to 400 lbs.
One maund is equivalent to 82⅞ lbs.
One maund of paddy is taken as equivalent to 25 seers of rice.

GENERAL RESULTS—TEN MONTHS' IMPORTS INTO THE PORTS FROM UP COUNTRY, ETC., THIS YEAR AND LAST YEAR.

The ten months' figures in table I show (in round numbers) an increase of—

88 per cent in gram and pulse
(724,500 tons as against 384,800 tons last year),

58 per cent in wheat (excluding wheat flour)
(1,726,400 tons as against 1,093,500 tons last year),

22 per cent in tea
(278,431,300 lbs. as against 227,570,000 lbs. last year), and

10 per cent in raw cotton
(2,665,800 bales as against 2,411,300 bales last year).

Imports of linseed by rail, river, and sea into ports show a decrease of 57 per cent (141,300 tons as against 326,000 tons last year) mainly on account of smaller exports from Bihar and Orissa, the United Provinces, Central Provinces and Berar, Nizam's Territory, and Rajputana, and Central India. The decrease of 29 per cent (107,400 tons as against 152,000 tons last year) in rape and mustard seed is mainly accounted for by smaller exports from the United Provinces. The imports of jute into Calcutta show a decrease of 20 per cent (3,737,200 bales as against 4,680,000 bales last year), owing mainly to smaller exports from Bengal. The fall of 3 per cent (881,100 tons as against 912,100 tons last year) in the imports of rice (including paddy) into ports is mainly due to smaller shipments from Burma.

TRADE FLUCTUATIONS IN JANUARY, 1918, AS COMPARED WITH THE PREVIOUS MONTH.

21 per cent in jute
(519,500 bales as against 654,100 bales previous month),

18 per cent in wheat (excluding wheat flour)
(51,900 tons as against 63,500 tons previous month),

4 per cent in tea
(43,383,500 lbs. as against 45,114,100 lbs. previous month), and

1 per cent in gram and pulse
(91,000 tons as against 92,000 tons previous month).

and an increase of—

114 per cent in linseed
(18,200 tons as against 8,500 tons previous month),

41 per cent in raw cotton
(385,800 bales as against 273,700 bales previous month),

25 per cent in rape and mustard seed
(8,700 tons as against 7,000 tons previous month), and

15 per cent in rice (including paddy)
(125,900 tons as against 109,800 tons previous month).

The statistics for January, 1917 and 1918, as also for the ten months ending January, 1917 and 1918, together with those for December, 1917 and January, 1918, are summarised below:—
